

SEMINARY LIBRARY
PASSIONIST FATHERS

SEMINARY LIBRARY.
Christopher A. Howell.
PASSIONIST FATHERS

THE EPISTLES OF ST PAUL.

III.

THE FIRST ROMAN CAPTIVITY.

I.

EPISTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS.

Cambridge:

PRINTED BY C. J. CLAY, M.A.
AT THE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

ST PAUL'S
EPISTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS.

WITHDRAWN

A REVISED TEXT

WITH

INTRODUCTION, NOTES, AND DISSERTATIONS.

BY

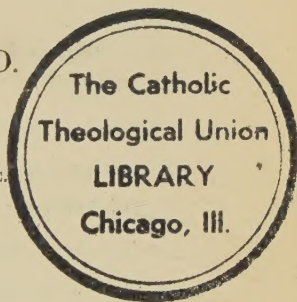

J. B. LIGHTFOOT, D.D.

CANON OF ST PAUL'S;

HONORARY FELLOW OF TRINITY COLLEGE,

AND

HULSEAN PROFESSOR OF DIVINITY, CAMBRIDGE.

THIRD EDITION.

~~SEMINARY LIBRARY
PASSIONIST FATHERS~~

London and Cambridge:
MACMILLAN AND CO.

1873.

[All Rights reserved.]

ΜΙΜΗΤΑΙ ΜΟΥ ΓΙΝΕΣΘΕ ΚΑΘΩΣ ΚΑΓΩ ΧΡΙΣΤΟΥ.

Παῦλος γενόμενος μέγιστος ὑπογραμμός.

CLEMENT.

Οὐχ ὥς Παῦλος διατάσσομαι ὑμῖν· ἐκεῖνος ἀπόστολος, ἐγὼ κατάκριτος· ἐκεῖνος ἐλείθερος, ἐγὼ δὲ μέχρι νῦν δοῦλος.

IGNATIUS.

Οὔτε ἐγὼ οὔτε ἄλλος ὅμοιος ἐμοὶ δύναται κατακολουθῆσαι
τῇ σοφίᾳ τοῦ μακαρίου καὶ ἐνδόξου Παύλου.

POLYCARP.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION.

THE present volume is a second instalment of the commentary on St Paul's Epistles, of which I sketched a plan in the preface to my edition of the Galatians. At the same time it is intended, like its predecessor, to be complete in itself; so that the plan, as a whole, may be interrupted at any time without detriment to the parts.

Here again I have the pleasure of repeating my obligations to the standard works of reference, and to those commentators, both English and German, whose labours extend over both Epistles and to whom I before acknowledged my debt of gratitude. The special commentaries on this epistle are neither so numerous nor so important, as on the former. The best, with which I am acquainted, are those of Van Hengel, of Rilliet, and of Eadie; but to these I am not conscious of any direct obligation which is not acknowledged in its proper place. I have also consulted from time to time several other more or less important works on this epistle, which it will be unnecessary to specify, as they either lay no claim to originality or for other reasons have furnished no material of which I could avail myself.

It is still a greater gratification to me to renew my thanks to personal friends, who have assisted me with their suggestions and corrections; and to one more especially whose aid has been freely given in correcting the proof-sheets of this volume throughout.

The Epistle to the Philippians presents an easier task to an editor than almost any of St Paul's Epistles. The readings are for the most part obvious; and only in a few passages does he meet with very serious difficulties of interpretation. I have taken advantage of this circumstance to introduce some investigations bearing on St Paul's Epistles and on Apostolic Christianity generally, by which this volume is perhaps swollen to an undue bulk, but which will proportionally relieve its successors. Thus the dissertation on the Christian ministry might well have been left for another occasion: but the mention of 'bishops and deacons' in the opening of this letter furnished a good text for the discussion; and the Pastoral Epistles, which deal more directly with questions relating to the ministerial office, will demand so much space for the solution of other difficulties, that it seemed advisable to anticipate and dispose of this important subject.

In the dissertation on 'St Paul and the Three,' attached to the Epistle to the Galatians, I endeavoured to sketch the attitude of the Apostle towards Judaism and Judaic Christianity. In the present volume the discussion on St Paul and Seneca is offered as an attempt to trace the relations of the Gospel to a second form of religious thought—the most imposing system of heathen philosophy with which the Apostle was brought directly in contact. And on a later occasion, if this commentary should ever be extended to the Epistle to the Colossians, I hope to add yet a third chapter to this history in an essay on 'Christianity and Gnosis.' These may be considered the three most important types of dogmatic and systematized religion (whether within or without the pale of Christendom) with which St Paul was confronted.

As we lay down the Epistle to the Galatians and take up the Epistle to the Philippians, we cannot fail to be struck by the contrast. We have passed at once from the most dogmatic to the least dogmatic of the Apostle's letters, and the transition is instructive. If in the one the Gospel is presented in its opposition to an individual form of error, in the other it appears as it is in itself. The dogmatic element in the Galatians is due to special circumstances and bears a special character; while on the other hand the Philippian Epistle may be taken to exhibit the normal type of the Apostle's teaching, when not determined and limited by individual circumstances, and thus to present the essential substance of the Gospel. Dogmatic forms are the buttresses or the scaffold-poles of the building, not the building itself.

But, if the Epistle to the Philippians serves to correct one false conception of Christianity, it is equally impressive as a protest against another. In the natural reaction against excess of dogma, there is a tendency to lay the whole stress of the Gospel on its ethical precepts. For instance men will often tacitly assume, and even openly avow, that its kernel is contained in the Sermon on the Mount. This conception may perhaps seem more healthy in its impulse and more directly practical in its aim; but in fact it is not less dangerous even to morality than the other: for, when the sources of life are cut off, the stream will cease to flow. Certainly this is not St Paul's idea of the Gospel as it appears in the Epistle to the Philippians. If we would learn what he held to be its essence, we must ask ourselves what is the significance of such phrases as 'I desire you in the heart of Jesus Christ,' 'To me to live is Christ,' 'That I may know the power of Christ's resurrection,' 'I have all strength in Christ that giveth me power.' Though the Gospel is capable of doctrinal exposition, though it is eminently fertile in moral results, yet its substance is neither a dogmatic system nor an ethical code, but a Person and a Life.

TRINITY COLLEGE,

July 1st, 1868.

CONTENTS.

INTRODUCTION.

	PAGE
I. St Paul in Rome	I—28
II. Order of the Epistles of the Captivity	29—45
III. The Church of Philippi	46—64
IV. Character and Contents of the Epistle	65—72
The Genuineness of the Epistle	73—76

TEXT AND NOTES.

i. 1—i. 26	79—92
The synonymes 'bishop' and 'presbyter'	93—97
The meaning of 'prætorium' in i. 13	97—102
i. 27—iii. 1.	103—124
The synonymes μορφή and σχῆμα	125—131
Different interpretations of οὐχ ἀπαγγέλων ἡγήσατο.	131—135
Lost Epistles to the Philippians?	136—140

	PAGE
iii. 2—iv. 23	141—165
‘Clement my fellow-labourer’	166—169
Cæsar’s household	169—176
 DISSERTATIONS.
I. The Christian Ministry	179—267
II. St Paul and Seneca	268—326
The Letters of Paul and Seneca	327—331
 INDEX	 333—346

I.

ST PAUL IN ROME.

THE arrival of St Paul in the metropolis marks a new and important epoch in the history of the Christian Church. Hitherto he had come in contact with Roman institutions modified by local circumstances and administered by subordinate officers in the outlying provinces of the Empire. Now he was in the very centre and focus of Roman influence; and from this time forward neither the policy of the government nor the character of the reigning prince was altogether a matter of indifference to the welfare of Christianity. The change of scene had brought with it a change in the mutual relations between the Gospel and the Empire. They were now occupying the same ground, and a collision was inevitable. Up to this time the Apostle had found rather an ally than an enemy in a power which he had more than once successfully invoked against the malignity of his fellow-countrymen. This precarious alliance was henceforward exchanged for direct, though intermittent, antagonism. The Empire, which in one of his earlier epistles he would seem to have taken as the type of that restraining power which kept Antichrist in check¹, was itself now assuming the character of Antichrist. When St Paul appealed from the tribunal of the Jewish procurator to the court of Cæsar, he attracted the notice and challenged the hostility of the greatest power which the world had ever seen. The very emperor, to whom the appeal was made, bears the St Paul's visit to Rome alters the relations between the Gospel and the Empire.

¹ 2 Thess. ii. 6, 7.

The Nero-ignominy of the first systematic persecution of the Christians; and thus commenced the long struggle, which raged for several centuries, and ended in establishing the Gospel on the ruins of the Roman Empire. It was doubtless the impulse given to the progress of Christianity by the presence of its greatest preacher in the metropolis, which raised the Church in Rome to a position of prominence, and made it a mark for the wanton attacks of the tyrant. Its very obscurity would have shielded it otherwise. The preaching of Paul was the necessary antecedent to the persecution of Nero.

St Paul's sense of the importance of this visit. It is probable that the Apostle foresaw the importance of his decision, when he transferred his cause to the tribunal of Cæsar. There is a significant force in his declaration at an earlier date, that he 'must see Rome¹.' It had long been his 'earnest desire²' to visit the imperial city, and he had been strengthened in this purpose by a heavenly vision³. To prepare the way for his visit he had addressed to the Roman Church a letter containing a more complete and systematic exposition of doctrine than he ever committed to writing before or after. And now, when the moment has arrived, the firm and undaunted resolution, with which in defiance of policy he makes his appeal, bears testimony to the strength of his conviction⁴. The sacred historian takes pains to emphasize this visit to Rome. He doubtless echoes the feeling of St Paul himself, when he closes his record with a notice of the Apostle's success in the metropolis, deeming this the fittest termination to his narrative, as the virtual and prospective realisation of our Lord's promise placed in its forefront, that the Apostles should be His witnesses to 'the uttermost part of the earth⁵.'

Aspect of affairs when St Paul arrived. It was probably in the early spring of the year 61, that St Paul arrived in Rome⁶. The glorious five years, which ushered in the reign of Nero amidst the acclamations of a

¹ Acts xix. 21.

² Rom. i. 10—16, xv. 22—24, 28, 29, 32, ἐπιποθῶ, ἐπιποθίαν ἔχων.

³ Acts xxiii. 11 'So must thou bear witness also at Rome.'

⁴ Acts xxv. 11.

⁵ Acts i. 8. See Lekebusch Apostel-geschichte p. 227 sq.

⁶ See Wieseler Chronol. p. 66 sq.

grateful people, and which later ages recalled with wistful regret, as an ideal of imperial rule¹, had now drawn to a close. The unnatural murder of Agrippina had at length revealed the true character of Nero. Burrus and Seneca, it is true, still lingered at the head of affairs: but their power was waning. Neither the blunt honesty of the soldier nor the calm moderation of the philosopher could hold their ground any longer against the influence of more subtle and less scrupulous counsellors.

At Rome the Apostle remained for 'two whole years,' preaching the Gospel without interruption, though preaching it in bonds. By specifying this period² St Luke seems to imply that at its close there was some change in the outward condition of the prisoner. This change can hardly have been any other than the approach of his long-deferred trial, which ended, as there is good ground for believing³, in his acquittal and release. At all events he must have been liberated before July 64, if liberated at all. The great fire which then devastated Rome became the signal for an onslaught on the unoffending Christians; and one regarded as the ringleader of the hated sect could hardly have escaped the general massacre.

It will appear strange that so long an interval was allowed to elapse before the trial came on. But while the defendant had no power to hasten the tardy course of justice, the accusers were interested in delaying it. They must have foreseen plainly enough the acquittal of a prisoner whom the provincial

Length of his sojourn.

Probable causes of the delay
of his trial.

¹ Aurel. Vict. Cæs. 5 'Uti merito Trajanus sæpius testaretur procul differre cunctos principes Neronis quinquennio.'

² Acts xxviii. 30, 31. The inference in the text will not hold, if, as some suppose, St Luke's narrative was accidentally broken off and terminates abruptly. From this view however I dissent for two reasons. (1) A comparison with the closing sentences of the Gospel shows a striking parallelism in the plan of the two narratives; they end alike, as they had begun alike. (2) The success of St Paul's preaching in Rome is a fitter termination to the history than any other incident which could have been chosen. It is the most striking realisation of that promise of the universal spread of the Gospel, which is the starting-point of the narrative.

³ The discussion of this question is reserved for the introduction to the Pastoral Epistles.

Indolence
of Nero.

governor himself had declared to be innocent¹. If they wished to defer the issue, the collection of evidence was a sufficient plea to urge in order to obtain an extension of time². St Paul was charged with stirring up sedition among 'all the Jews throughout the world³. From the whole area therefore, over which his labours had extended, witnesses must be summoned. In this way two years might easily run out before the prisoner appeared for judgment. But more potent probably, than any formal plea, was the indolence or the caprice of the emperor himself⁴, who frequently postponed the hearing of causes indefinitely without any assignable reason, and certainly would not put himself out to do justice to a despised provincial, labouring under a perplexing charge connected with some 'foreign superstition.' If St Paul had lingered in close confinement for two years under Felix, he might well be content to remain under τοῖς κατὰ τὴν οἰκουμένην.

¹ Acts xxv. 12, 25; comp. xxvi. 31, 32.

² Two cases in point are quoted, as occurring about this time. Tac. Ann. xiii. 52 'Silvanum magna vis accusatorum circumsteterat, poscebatque tempus evocandorum testium: reus illico defendi postulabat.' Silvanus had been proconsul of Africa. Also we are told of Suillius, who was accused of peculation in the government of Asia, Ann. xiii. 43 'Quia inquisitionem annuam impetraverunt, brevius visum [sub-]urbana crimina incipi quorum obvii testes erant.' In both these cases the accusers petition for an extension of the period, while it is the interest of the defendant to be tried at once. In the second case a year is demanded and allowed for collecting evidence, though the crimes in question are confined to his tenure of office and to the single province of 'Asia.' On the whole subject see Wieseler, Chronol. 407 sq., who has fully discussed the possible causes of delay. Compare also Conybeare and Howson ii. p. 462 sq. (2nd ed.).

³ Acts xxiv. 5 πασι τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις

⁴ Josephus (Ant. xviii. 6. 5) says of Tiberius, whom he describes as μελλήτης εἰ καὶ τις ἐτέρων βασιλέων ἢ τυράννων γενόμενος, that he deferred the trial of prisoners indefinitely in order to prolong their tortures. Nero seems to have been almost as dilatory, though more from recklessness and indolence than from deliberate purpose. The case of the priests accused by Felix (see below, p. 5, note 4) illustrates this. Felix ceased to be procurator in the year 60: yet they were still prisoners in 63 or 64, and were only then liberated at the intercession of Josephus. For the date see Clinton Fasti Rom. i. pp. 23, 45, 77.

Geib Geschichte des römischen Criminalprocesses etc. p. 691, speaking of causes tried before the emperor, describes the practice of the early Cæsars as so 'unsteady and capricious in all respects,' that no definite rule can be laid down: 'Erst in der späteren Kaiserzeit,' he adds, 'ist dieses anders geworden und zwar namentlich hinsichtlich des Appellationsverfahrens.' Similarly less irksome restraints for an equal length of time, awaiting the pleasure of Cæsar.

Meanwhile events occurred at Rome which shook society to its foundations. The political horizon was growing every day darker¹. Death deprived Nero of his most upright adviser in the person of Burrus the prefect of the prætorians. The office thus vacated was handed over to Tigellinus, with whom was associated as colleague the feeble and insignificant Rufus. By the death of Burrus the influence of Seneca was effectually broken²; and, though the emperor refused to consent to his retirement, his part in the direction of affairs was henceforth merely nominal. At the same time the guilty career of Nero culminated in the divorce and death of Octavia; and the cruel and shameless Poppæa became the emperor's consort in her stead. With a strange inconsistency of character, which would atone for profligate living by a fervour of religious devotion, and of which that age especially was fertile in examples, she had become a proselyte to Judaism³, and more than once advocated the cause of her adopted race before the emperor with zeal and success⁴.

Stirring events in Rome,

Laboulaye Lois Criminelles des Romains p. 444, 'Sous les premiers Césars tout se fit sans règle et sans mesure, et il ne faut pas chercher à cette époque de système régulier,' etc. There is no trace of a statutable limitation of time (præscriptio) applying to the imperial tribunal at this epoch.

¹ Tac. Ann. xiv. 51 'Gravescentibus indies publicis malis.'

² Tac. Ann. xiv. 52 'Mors Burri infregit Senecæ potentiam.'

³ Joseph. Antiq. xx. 8. 11 θεοσεβής γὰρ ἦν, i. e. a worshipper of the true God, a proselytess. In connexion with this fact the notice of her burial is remarkable; Tac. Ann. xvi. 6 'Corpus non igni abolitum, ut Romanus mos; sed regum externorum consuetudine differtum odoribus conditur etc.' See Friedländer Sittengeschichte Roms i. p.

348 (2nd ed.).

⁴ It is not irrelevant to relate two incidents which occurred at this time, as they illustrate the nature of the communication kept up between the Jews and the imperial court, and the sort of influence which Poppæa exerted on the affairs of this people.

(1) Felix, while procurator of Judæa, had brought a trivial charge against certain Jewish priests, and sent them to Rome to plead their cause before Cæsar. Here they were kept in a lingering captivity, living on the hardest fare, but remaining faithful in their allegiance to the God of their fathers. The historian Josephus, to whom these priests were known, then a young man, undertook a journey to Rome for the purpose of procuring their liberation. Like St Paul he was shipwrecked in not unknown to

St. Paul.

How far the personal condition of St Paul, or his prospects at the approaching trial, may have been affected by these two changes, I shall have to consider hereafter. At all events he cannot have been ignorant of such stirring incidents. His enforced companionship with the soldiers of the prætorian guard must have kept him informed of all changes in the administration of the camp. His intimacy with the members of Cæsar's household must have brought to his hearing the intrigues and crimes of the imperial court. It is strange therefore, that in the epistles written from Rome during this period there is not any, even the faintest, reference to events

His silence
explained.

so notorious in history. Strange at least at first sight. But the Apostle would not venture to risk his personal safety, or the cause which he advocated, by perilous allusions in letters which from their very nature must be made public. Nor indeed is it probable that he was under any temptation to allude to them. He did not breathe the atmosphere of political life; he was absorbed in higher interests and anxieties. With the care of all the churches daily pressing upon him, with a deep sense of the paramount importance of his personal mission, the Adriatic, and like him he also landed at Puteoli. Arrived at Rome, he was introduced to Poppæa by a certain Jew, Aliturus by name, an actor of mimes, who was in great favour with Nero. The empress not only advocated the cause which he had at heart and procured the liberation of his friends, but sent him back to his native country laden with presents (Joseph. Vit. § 3). This took place in the year 63 or 64, and was therefore nearly, if not quite, coincident with St Paul's residence in Rome.

(2) The second incident almost certainly occurred while the Apostle was in the metropolis. The king's palace at Jerusalem stood in the immediate neighbourhood of the temple. Agrippa had recently built a lofty tower, which enabled him to overlook the sacred enclosure and to witness the performance of the holy rites. This was an outrage on Jewish feeling, as well as a breach of immemorial custom, and was resented accordingly. The Jews erected a counterwall, which excluded all view from the royal residence. Festus the procurator took the side of the king and ordered the demolition of this wall; but afterwards yielded so far as to allow the Jews to refer the case to Nero. An embassy was accordingly sent to Rome, composed of twelve persons including Ismael the high-priest and Helcias the treasurer. Poppæa interested herself in the success of their mission, and in deference to her entreaties the emperor allowed the wall to stand (Joseph. Ant. xx. 8. 11).

It is suggested (Conybeare and Howson II. p. 462), that this embassy may with a near and fervid anticipation of his own dissolution and union with Christ, if not of the great and final crisis when heaven and earth themselves shall pass away, it is not surprising that all minor events, all transitory interests, should be merged in those more engrossing thoughts. His life—so he himself writing from Rome describes the temper of the true believer—his life was hidden with Christ in God¹.

The degree of restraint put upon a person labouring under a criminal charge was determined by various circumstances; by the nature of the charge itself, by the rank and reputation of the accused, by the degree of guilt presumed to attach to him. Those most leniently dealt with were handed over to their friends, who thus became sureties for their appearance; the worst offenders were thrown into prison and loaded with chains². The captivity of St Paul at Rome was neither the severest nor the lightest possible.

By his appeal to Cæsar³ he had placed himself at the emperor's disposal. Accordingly on his arrival in Rome he is delivered over to the commander of the imperial guards, the prefect of the prætorians⁴, under whose charge he appears to have been entrusted with the prosecution of St Paul. It seems at least certain, that the ambassadors arrived in Rome while the Apostle was still a prisoner there; since Festus had ceased to be procurator before the autumn of 62: but beyond the coincidence of date all is conjecture. In any case the friendly meeting of Festus and Agrippa, related in the Acts, may have had reference to this dispute about Agrippa's building: and if so, the incident links together the accusation of St Paul and the complaint against Agrippa.

¹ Col. iii. 3.

² On the different kinds of custodia, roughly distinguished as libera, publica, and militaris, but admitting various modifications, see Geib p. 561 sq., Wieseler Chronol. p. 380 sq., 394 sq.

The custody of St Paul belongs to the last of the three.

³ In republican times a difference was made between 'provocatio' and 'appellatio.' The former was a reference to the populus, the latter to the tribunes. On the other hand, the appeal to the emperor was called indifferently 'provocatio' or 'appellatio'; for he combined all functions in himself. The latter term however seems to have been the more common. On this subject consult Geib p. 675 sq., Rein Das Privatrecht etc. p. 960. Krebs, Opusc. p. 135 sq., has an essay De provocatione D. Pauli ad Cæsarem; which however does not contain any important matter.

⁴ Acts xxviii. ἰὺ παρέδωκεν τοὺς δεσμίους τῇ στρατοπεδάρχῃ, i. e. to the 'præfectus prætorio' or 'præfectus præ-

He is in bonds, but have remained throughout his captivity. He represents himself as strictly a prisoner: he speaks again and again of his bonds¹. At times he uses more precise language, mentioning the 'coupling-chain'². According to Roman custom he was bound by the hand to the soldier who guarded him, and was never left alone day or night. As the soldiers would relieve guard in constant succession, the prætorians one by one were brought into communication with the 'prisoner of Jesus Christ,' tori,' for both cases are found in inscriptions. From the use of the singular here it has been argued with much probability that the officer in question was Burrus. He held the prefecture alone, whereas both before and after his time the office was shared by two persons: see Tac. Ann. xii. 42, xiv. 51. For the changes which this office underwent at different times, consult Becker and Marquardt Röm. Alterth. ii. 3, p. 286. With the singular here contrast the plural in Trajan's letter, Plin. Ep. x. 65 'Vinctus mitti ad præfectos prætori mei debet,' and in Philostr. Vit. Soph. ii. 32 ἀνεπέμφθη εἰς τὴν Ῥώμην ὡς ἀπολογησόμενος τοῖς τῶν στρατοπέδων ἡγεμόσιν: see Wieseler Chronol. p. 88. The whole clause however is rejected by most recent editors, as the balance of existing authorities is very decidedly against it. On the other hand the statement does not look like an arbitrary fiction, and may contain a genuine tradition, even if it was no part of the original text.

¹ He calls himself δέσμιος, Acts xxviii. 17, Philem. 1, 9, Ephes. iii. 1, iv. 1; his δεσμοὶ are mentioned Phil. i. 7, 13, 14, 17, Philem. 10, 13, Coloss. iv. 18; comp. Coloss. iv. 3 δι' ὃ (or δν) καὶ δέδεμαι.

² ἄλυσις, Ephes. vi. 20 ὑπὲρ οὗ πρεσβεύω ἐν ἄλυσει, Acts xxviii. 20 τὴν ἄλυσιν ταύτην περίκειμαι. The word seems originally to differ from δεσμός, only as bringing out the idea of attachment rather than confinement. Afterwards however it signifies especially 'hand-fetters' (manicæ), as opposed to πέδαι (pedicæ); Mark v. 4 πέδαις καὶ ἀλύσειν δεδέναι, καὶ διασπᾶσθαι ὑπ' αὐτοῦ τὰς ἀλύσεις καὶ τὰς πέδας συντετριφθαι. Meyer indeed denies this distinction: but the words διασπᾶσθαι, συντετριφθαι, if taken to denote the action of the hands and feet respectively, are much more expressive; and the distinction of ἀλύσεις and πέδαι seems certainly to be observed elsewhere, e.g. Polyb. iii. 82. 8, Dion. Hal. Ant. Rom. vi. 26, 27: comp. Plut. Mor. p. 829 Α ταῖς χερσὶν ἀλύσεις. In Aristoph. Fragm. (Meineke ii. p. 1079), where both ἀλύσεις and πέδαι are mentioned as ladies' ornaments, the former are perhaps 'bracelets' or 'cuffs': see also Nicostr. Fragm. (ib. iii. p. 289). Hence the word is used especially of the 'coupling-chain,' 'hand-cuff,' by which the prisoner was attached to his guard, as in the case of Agrippa, Joseph. Ant. xviii. 6. 7, 10. Compare the metaphor in Lucian, Quom. hist. conscr. § 55 ἐχόμενον αὐτοῦ καὶ ἀλύσεως τρόπῳ (τρόπον?) συνηρμοσμένον, with Senec. Epist. i. 5 'Quemadmodum eadem catena et custodiam et militem copulat.' See a similar use in Plutarch, Vit. Mar. 27 ἦσαν ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ διασπᾶσθαι τὴν τάξιν οἱ πρόμαχοι μακρὰς ἀλύσεσι συνεχόμενοι.

When the confinement was very rigorous, the prisoner was bound to two soldiers. This was the case with St and thus he was able to affirm that his bonds had borne witness to the Gospel 'throughout the imperial regiments¹.'

On the other hand, the severity of his confinement was not so great as this circumstance standing alone might seem to imply. It is certain that all had free access to him, and that he was allowed to converse and write without restraint. He was not thrown into prison, but lived in rooms of his own. When he first arrived, he was taken to temporary lodgings; either to a house of public entertainment, or to the abode of some friend². But afterwards he rented a dwelling of his own³, and there he remained apparently till his release.

A natural desire has been felt to determine a locality so fraught with interest as St Paul's abode in Rome. Some have imagined him a prisoner within the barracks attached to the imperial residence on the Palatine. Others have fixed his dwelling-place in the great camp, the head-quarters of the prætorians, without the walls to the north-east of the city. The former conjecture seems hardly consistent with the mention of his own hired house. The latter is less unlikely, for the camp enjoys comparative liberty.

St Paul's abode at Rome.

Peter, Acts xii. 6 κοιμώμενος μεταξύ δύο στρατιωτῶν δεδεμένος ἀλύσειν δυσίν. Such had also been St Paul's condition during the early days of his captivity at Jerusalem: Acts xxi. 33. A relaxation of the rigour of his earlier imprisonment is mentioned Acts xxiv. 23. On this whole subject see Wieseler Chronol. p. 380 sq. When Ignatius, Rom. 5, speaks of himself as ἐνδεδεμένος δέκα λεοπάρδοις ὃ ἐστὶν στρατιωτικὸν τάγμα, we must understand that he was in charge of a company of ten, who successively relieved guard, so that he was attached to one at a time.

¹ Phil. i. 13 ἐν ὅλῳ τῷ πραιτωρίῳ.

² Acts xxviii. 23 εἰς τὴν ξενίαν. Suidas explains ξενίαν by καταγῶγιον, κατάλυμα, and similarly Hesychius; comp. Clem. Hom. i. 15 ἐπιβάντος μου τῆς γῆς καὶ ξενίαν θηρωμένου; viii. 2, xii. 24, xiv. 1, 8. On the other hand Philem.

22 ἐτοίμαξέ μοι ξενίαν rather suggests a lodging in a friend's house: comp. Acts xxi. 16.

³ Acts xxviii. 30 ἐνέμεινεν διετίαν ὅλην ἐν ἰδίῳ μισθώματι, where ἰδίῳ seems certainly to distinguish the μισθωμα here from the ξενία above. The word μισθωμα elsewhere signifies 'hire,' being used especially in a bad sense of shameful wages, e. g. Deut. xxiii. 18. Hence Philo in Flacc. p. 536 μ μετὰ τὸν ἐπάρπατον μισθόν, ἢ κυριώτερον εἰπεῖν, τὸ μισθωμα: comp. Ælian V. H. iv. 12. The sense, which it has here, is not recognised by the Greek lexicographers, nor can I find any other instance. Wetstein indeed quotes ἐν μισθώματι οἰκεῖν as from Philo, but gives no reference, and I suspect there is a mistake. This exceptional meaning of μισθωμα may perhaps be explained as a translation of the Latin 'conductum.'

was large and might have contained within its precincts lodgings rented by prisoners under military custody. Yet the reference to the 'prætorium' does not require this, and the circumstances seem naturally to point to a separate dwelling. Within the camp then his abode may have been, near to the camp it probably was, for in the choice of a locality the convenience of the soldiers in relieving guard would naturally be consulted¹.

Thus mitigated, his captivity did not materially impede the progress of his missionary work. On the contrary he himself regarded his bonds as a powerful agency in the spread of the Gospel. Beyond the dreary monotony of his situation, which might well have crushed a spirit unsustained by his lofty hopes and consolations, he was not very hardly treated. It was at least an alleviation, that no restriction was placed on the visits of his friends.

Friends
resident in Rome.

Of these friends not a few names might be supplied by conjecture from the long list of salutations in the Epistle to the Romans. Did he fall in once again with Aquila and Priscilla, his fellow-artisans and fellow-sufferers, who 'for his life had laid down their own necks'²? Did he still find in Rome his countrymen, perhaps his kinsmen, Andronicus and Junias and Herodion³? Did he experience once more the tender care of the mother of Rufus, who in times past had treated him as her own son⁴? Did he renew his intimacy with those former friends of whom he speaks with affectionate warmth, Epænetus his well-beloved, Urbanus his helper in Christ, Mary who laboured much for him, Amplias, Stachys, Persis⁵?

Of Roman residents however, beyond a general reference to the members of Cæsar's household⁶, he makes no mention in his letters written from the metropolis. They would probably be unknown to his distant correspondents. But of occasional visitors in Rome, his converts or his colleagues in the Gospel, the

His personal compa-

¹ See the detached note on the meaning of 'prætorium' in i. 13.

² Rom. xvi. 3.

³ Rom. xvi. 7, 11.

⁴ Rom. xvi. 13.

⁵ Rom. xvi. 5, 6, 8, 9, 12.

⁶ Phil. iv. 22.

companions of his travels and the delegates of foreign churches, not a few are named. His youthful disciple and associate Timotheus, the best beloved of his spiritual sons, seems to have been with him during the whole or nearly the whole of his captivity¹. Another friend also, who had shared with him the perils of the voyage, Luke 'the beloved physician,' now his fellow-labourer and perhaps his medical attendant, hereafter his biographer, is constantly by his side². His two favourite Macedonian churches are well represented among his companions: Philippi despatches Epaphroditus with pecuniary aid, welcome to him as a relief of his wants but doubly welcome as a token of their devoted love³: Aristarchus is present from Thessalonica⁴, a tried associate, who some years before had imperilled his life with St Paul at Ephesus⁵ and now shared his captivity at Rome⁶. Delegates from the Asiatic churches too were with him: Ty-chicus⁷, a native of the Roman province of Asia and probably of Ephesus its capital⁸, the Apostle's companion both in earlier and later days⁹: and Epaphras the evangelist of his native Colossæ, who came to consult St Paul on the dangerous heresies then threatening this and the neighbouring churches over which he watched with intense anxiety¹⁰. Besides these were

¹ His name appears in the opening salutations of the Epistles to the Philippians, Colossians, and Philemon: compare also Phil. ii. 19—23. It may perhaps be inferred from St Luke's silence, Acts xxvii. 2, that Timotheus did not accompany St Paul on his journey to Rome, but joined him soon after his arrival.

² Col. iv. 14, Philem. 24.

³ Phil. ii. 25—30, iv. 14—18. See below, p. 60.

⁴ Col. iv. 10, Philem. 24. On the notice of Aristarchus in Acts xxvii. 2, see below, p. 34, note 2.

⁵ Acts xix. 29.

⁶ In Col. iv. 10, St Paul styles him συναϊχμάλωτός μου. Perhaps however this may refer to the incident at Ephesus already alluded to (Acts xix. 29). Or does it signify a spiritual subjection (αἰχμαλωσία, Rom. vii. 23, 2 Cor. x. 5, Ephes. iv. 8), so that it may be compared with σύνδουλος (Col. i. 7, iv. 7), and συνστρατιώτης (Phil. ii. 25, Philem. 2)? St Paul uses the term συναϊχμάλωτος also of Epaphras (Philem. 23), and of his 'kinsmen' Andronicus and Junias or Junia (Rom. xvi. 7).

⁷ Ephes. vi. 21, Col. iv. 7.

⁸ Acts xx. 4, 2 Tim. iv. 12. He is mentioned together with Trophimus, Acts i. c., and Trophimus was an Ephesian, ib. xxi. 29.

⁹ Acts xx. 4, 2 Tim. iv. 12: comp. Tit. iii. 12. Perhaps also he is one of the anonymous brethren in 2 Cor. viii. 18, 22.

¹⁰ Col. i. 7, iv. 12.

other friends old and new: one pair especially, whose names are linked together by contrast; John Mark who, having deserted in former years, has now returned to his post and is once more a loyal soldier of Christ¹; and Demas, as yet faithful to his allegiance, who hereafter will turn renegade and desert the Apostle in his sorest need². To these must be added a disciple of the Circumcision, whose surname 'the just'³ proclaims his devotion to his former faith—one Jesus, to us a name only, but to St Paul much more than a name, for amidst the general defection of the Jewish converts he stood by the Apostle almost alone⁴. Lastly, there was Philemon's runaway slave Onesimus, 'not now a slave, but above a slave, a brother beloved,' whose career is the most touching episode in the apostolic history and the noblest monument of the moral power of the Gospel⁵.

St Paul's
correspondence with foreign Churches.

These friendships supported him under the 'care of all the churches,' which continued to press upon him in his captivity not less heavily than before. The epistles of this period bear testimony alike to the breadth and the intensity of his sympathy with others. The Church of Philippi which he had himself planted and watered, and the Church of Colossæ with which he had no personal acquaintance, alike claim and receive his fatherly advice. The temporal interests of the individual slave, and the spiritual well-being of the collective Churches of Asia⁶, are equally the objects of his care. Yet these four epistles which alone survive, must represent very inadequately the extent of the demands made upon his time and energies at this period. There is no notice here of Thessalonica, none of Corinth, none of the churches of Syria, of his own native Cilicia, of Lycaonia and Pisidia and Galatia. It is idle to speculate on the possibility of lost epistles: but, whether by his letters or by his delegates, we cannot doubt that these brotherhoods,

¹ Col. iv. 10, Philem. 24: comp. 2 Tim. iv. 11.

² Col. iv. 14, Philem. 24: comp. 2 Tim. iv. 10.

³ See Galatians p. 348, note 1.

⁴ Col. iv. 11.

⁵ Col. iv. 9, and Philem. 10 sq.

⁶ The Epistle to the Ephesians seems to have been a circular letter to the Asiatic Churches.

which had a special claim upon him as their spiritual father, received their due share of attention from this 'prisoner of Jesus Christ.'

But it was on Rome especially that he would concentrate his energies: Rome, which for years past he had longed to see with an intense longing: the common sink of all the worst vices of humanity¹, and therefore the noblest sphere for evangelical zeal. Here he would find a wider field and a richer soil, than any which had hitherto attracted him. But the ground had not lain altogether fallow. There was already a large and flourishing Church, a mixed community of Jew and Gentile converts, founded, it would seem, partly by his own companions and disciples, partly by teachers commissioned directly from Palestine and imbued with the strongest prejudices of their race; a heterogeneous mass, with diverse feelings and sympathies, with no well-defined organization, with no other bond of union than the belief in a common Messiah; gathering, we may suppose, for purposes of worship in small knots here and there, as close neighbourhood or common nationality or sympathy or accident drew them together; but, as a body, lost in the vast masses of the heathen population, and only faintly discerned or contemptuously ignored even by the large community of Jewish residents.

With the nucleus of a Christian Church thus ready to hand, but needing to be instructed and consolidated, with an enormous outlying population of unconverted Jews and Gentiles to be gathered into the fold, the Apostle entered upon his work. Writing to the Romans three years before, he had expressed his assurance that, when he visited them, he would 'come in the fulness of the blessing of Christ².' There is every reason to believe that this confidence was justified by the event. The notice, with which the narrative of St Luke closes, implies no small measure of success. The same may be inferred from state of the Roman Church.

Existing

Success of St Paul's labours in Rome.

¹ Tac. Ann. xv. 44 'Quo cuncta undique atrocita aut pudenda confluent celebranturque.' Tacitus is speaking of the spread of Christianity in Rome.

² Rom. xv. 29.

allusions in St Paul's own epistles and is confirmed by the subsequent history of the Roman Church.

In considering the results of the Apostle's labours more in detail, it will be necessary to view the Jewish and Gentile converts separately. In no Church are their antipathies and feuds more strongly marked than in the Roman. Long after their junction the two streams are distinctly traced, each with its own colour, its own motion; and a generation at least elapses, before they are inseparably united. In the history of St Paul they flow almost wholly apart.

St Paul
addresses himself first to the Jews,

1. Several thousands of Jews had been uprooted from their native land and transplanted to Rome by Pompeius. In this new soil they had spread rapidly, and now formed a very important element in the population of the metropolis. Living unmolested in a quarter of their own beyond the Tiber, protected and fostered by the earlier Cæsars, receiving constant accessions from home, they abounded everywhere, in the forum, in the camp, even in the palace itself¹. Their growing influence alarmed the moralists and politicians of Rome. 'The vanquished,' said Seneca bitterly, 'have given laws to their victors².' Immediately on his arrival the Apostle summoned to his lodgings the more influential members of his race—probably the rulers of the synagogues³. In seeking this interview he seems to have had a double purpose. On the one hand he was anxious to secure their good-will and thus to forestall the calumnies of his enemies; on the other he paid respect to their spiritual prerogative, by holding out to them the first offer of the Gospel⁴. On their arrival he explained to them the cir-

¹ On the numbers and influence of the Jews in Rome, see Merivale History of the Romans vi. p. 257 sq., Friedländer Sittengesch. iii. p. 509 sq.

² Seneca quoted by St Augustine De Civ. Dei vi. 11, 'Cum interim usque eo sceleratissimæ gentis consuetudo convalluit, ut per omnes jam terras recepta sit: victi victoribus leges dederunt.'

Compare also Pers. Sat. v. 180, Juv. vi. 542. The mock excuse of Horace, Sat. i. 9. 70, shows how wide was the influence of this race in Rome, even a generation earlier. See also Ovid A. A. i. 76, and references in Merivale p. 259.

³ Acts xxviii. 17 sq.

⁴ He had declared this prerogative of the Jews in writing to the Roman cumstances which had brought him there. To his personal explanations they replied, in real or affected ignorance, that they had received no instructions from Palestine; they had heard no harm of him and would gladly listen to his defence; only this they knew, that the sect of which he professed himself an adherent, had a bad name everywhere¹. For the exposition of his teaching a later day was fixed. When the time arrived, he 'expounded and testified the kingdom of God,' arguing from their own scriptures 'from morning till evening.' His success was not greater than with his fellow-countrymen elsewhere. He dismissed them, denouncing their stubborn unbelief and declaring his intention of communicating to the Gentiles that offer which they had spurned. It is not probable that he made any further advances in this direction. He had broken ground and nothing more.

Yet it was not from any indisposition to hear of Messiah's advent that they gave this cold reception to the new teacher. The announcement in itself would have been heartily welcomed, for it harmonized with their most cherished hopes. For years past Jewish society in Rome had been kept in a fever of excite-but is coldly received.

Their anticipation of Messiah.

Church, i. 16, ii. 9, 10, and would feel bound to regard it, when he arrived in the metropolis.

¹ It is maintained by Baur (Paulus p. 368), Schwegler (Nachapost. Zeit. ii. p. 93), and Zeller (Theolog. Jahrb. 1849, p. 571), that this portion of the narrative betrays the unhistorical character of the Acts; that the language here ascribed to the Jews ignores the existence of the Roman Church, and that therefore the incident is irreconcilable with the facts as gathered from the Epistle to the Romans. On the contrary, this language seems to me to be quite natural under the circumstances, as it was certainly most politic. It is not very likely that the leading Jews would frankly recognise the facts of the case. They had been taught caution by the troubles which the Messianic feuds had brought on their more impetuous fellow-countrymen; and they would do wisely to shield themselves under a prudent reserve. Their best policy was to ignore Christianity; to enquire as little as possible about it, and, when questioned, to understate their knowledge. In a large and populous city like Rome they might without much difficulty shut their eyes to its existence. When its claims were directly pressed upon them by St Paul, their character for fairness, perhaps also some conscientious scruples, required them to give him at least a formal hearing. At all events the writer of the Acts is quite aware that there was already a Christian Church in Rome; for he represents the Apostle as met on his way by two deputations from it. Indeed the two last chapters of the narrative so clearly indicate the presence of an eyewitness, that we can hardly question the incidents, even if we are at a loss how to interpret them.

ment by successive rumours of false Christs. On one occasion a tumult had broken out, and the emperor had issued a general edict of banishment against the race¹. If this check had made them more careful and less demonstrative, it had certainly not smothered their yearnings after the advent of a Prince who was to set his foot on the neck of their Roman oppressors. But the Christ of their anticipations was not the Christ of St Paul's preaching. Grace, liberty, the abrogation of law, the supremacy of faith, the levelling of all religious and social castes—these were strange sounds in their ears; these were conditions which they might not and would not accept.

Judaic
Christianity in Rome.

But where he had failed, other teachers, who sympathized more fully with their prejudices and made larger concessions to their bigotry, might win a way. The proportion of Jewish converts saluted in the Epistle to the Romans², not less

¹ Sueton. Claud. 25 'Judæos impulsore Chresto assidue tumultuantes Roma expulit.' Suetonius here makes a double mistake: (1) He confuses the names Chrestus and Christus. This confusion was not unnatural, for the difference in pronunciation was hardly perceptible, and Chrestus, 'the good-natured,' was a frequent proper name, while Christus, 'the anointed,' would convey no idea at all to a heathen ignorant of the Old Testament and unacquainted with Hebrew customs. The mistake continued to be made long after Suetonius: comp. Justin Apol. i. p. 54 ὅσον γε ἐκ τοῦ κατηγορουμένου ἡμῶν ὀνόματος, χρηστότατοι ὑπάρχομεν, Tertull. Apol. 3 'Cum perperam Chrestianus pronuntiatur a vobis,' ad Nat. i. 3, Theoph. ad Autol. i. 12 περὶ δὲ τοῦ καταγελᾶν μου καλοῦντά με Χριστιανόν, οὐκ οἶδας ὃ λέγεις· πρῶτον μὲν ὅτι τὸ χριστόν ἡδὺ καὶ εὐχρηστον καὶ ἀκαταγέλαιον ἐστίν; and even as late as Lactantius, Inst. Div. iv. 7 'Exponenda hujus nominis ratio est propter ignorantium errorem, qui eum immutata littera Chrestum solent dicere.' See also Boeckh. C. I. 3857 p, App. The word 'Chrestianus' appears on an inscription (Münter Sinnbilder der alten Christen i. p. 14, Orell. Inscr. 4426), where however it may be a proper name. At all events the designation 'Christian' would hardly be expected on a monument of this date; for other names in the inscription (Drusus, Antonia) point to the age of the earlier Cæsars. M. Renan (Les Apôtres, p. 234) is wrong in saying that the termination -anus betrays a Latin origin. Compare Σαρδιανός, Τραλλιανός. (2) It seems probable that the disturbances which Suetonius here attributes to the instigation of some one Chrestus (or Christus), understanding this as a proper name, were really caused by various conflicting rumours of claimants to the Messiahship. Yet even in this case we may fairly suppose that the true Christ held a prominent place in these reports; for He must have been not less known at this time than any of the false Christs.

² The only strictly Jewish name is Mary; but Aquila and Priscilla are known to have been Jews. St Paul's than the obvious motive and bearing of the letter itself, points to the existence of a large, perhaps a preponderating, Jewish element in the Church of the metropolis before St Paul's arrival. These Christians of the Circumcision for the most part owed no spiritual allegiance to the Apostle of the Gentiles: some of them had confessed Christ before him¹; many no doubt were rigid in their adherence to the law. It would seem as though St Paul had long ago been apprehensive of the attitude these Jewish converts might assume towards him. The conciliatory tone of the Epistle to the Romans—conciliatory and yet uncompromising—seems intended to disarm possible opposition. Was it not this gloomy foreboding also which overclouded his spirit when he first set foot on the Italian shore? He had good reason to 'thank God and take courage,' when he was met by one deputation of Roman Christians at the Forum of Appius, by another at the Three Taverns². It was a relief to find that some members at least of the Roman Church were favourably disposed towards him. At all events his fears were not unfounded, as appeared from the sequel. His bold advocacy of the liberty of the Gospel provoked the determined antagonism of the Judaizers. We can hardly doubt to what class of teachers he alludes in the Epistle to the Philippians as preaching Christ of envy and strife, in a factious spirit, only for the purpose of thwarting him, only to increase his anguish and to render his chains more galling³. An incidental notice in another, probably a later epistle, written also from Rome, reveals the virulence of this opposition still more clearly. Of all the Jewish Christians in Rome the Apostle can name

Their opposition to St Paul.

'kinsmen' also, Andronicus, Junia (Junias?), and Herodion, must have belonged to this race, whatever sense we attach to the word 'kinsmen.' Apelles too, though not a strictly Jewish name, was frequently borne by Jews. If moreover the Aristobulus mentioned in ver. 10 belonged to the family of Herod, as seems most probable (see p. 172 sq.), then the members of 'his household'

also would in all likelihood be Jews.

¹ At the first day of Pentecost οἱ ἐπιδημοῦντες Ῥωμαῖοι, Ἰουδαῖοι τε καὶ προσήλυτοι, are mentioned among those present, Acts ii. 10. In the Epistle to the Romans St Paul salutes certain Jewish Christians, who were 'before him in Christ,' xvi. 7.

² Acts xxviii. 15.

³ Phil. i. 15—18.

three only as remaining steadfast in the general desertion; Aristarchus his own companion in travel and in captivity, Marcus the cousin of his former missionary colleague Barnabas, and Jesus surnamed the Just. 'In them,' he adds feelingly, 'I found comfort¹.'

Their zealous proselytism.

But if these sectarians resolutely opposed St Paul, they were hardly less zealous in preaching Christ. The incentive of rivalry goaded them on to fresh exertions. Their gospel was dwarfed and mutilated; it ignored the principle of liberty which was a main feature of the true Gospel: but though their motives were thus unworthy and their doctrine distorted, still 'Christ was preached': and for this cause, smothering all personal feeling, the Apostle constrained himself to rejoice².

The Gentile Christians welcome St
Paul.

2. Meanwhile among the Gentiles his preaching bore more abundant and healthier fruit. As he encountered in the existing Church of Rome the stubborn resistance of a compact body of Judaic antagonists, so also there were doubtless very many whose more liberal Christian training prepared them to welcome him as their leader and guide. If constant communication was kept up with Jerusalem, the facilities of intercourse with the cities which he himself had evangelized, with Corinth and Ephesus for instance, were even greater. The Syrian Orontes which washed the walls of Antioch the mother of Gentile Christendom, when it mingled its waters with the Tiber, assuredly bore thither some nobler freight than the scum and refuse of Oriental profligacy, the degraded religions and licentious morals of Asia³. Gentile Christianity was not less fairly represented in Rome than Judaic Christianity. If there were some who preached Christ of 'envy and strife,' there were others who preached Him of 'good-will.'

Thus aided and encouraged, the Apostle prosecuted his work among the Gentiles with signal and rapid success. In two quarters especially the results of his labours may be traced. The prætorian soldiers, drafted off successively to guard him and constrained while on duty to bear him close company, had opportunities of learning his doctrine and observing his manner of life, which were certainly not without fruit. He had not been in Rome very long, before he could boast that his bonds were not merely known but known in Christ throughout the prætorian guard¹. In the palace of the Cæsars too his influence was felt. It seems not improbable that when he arrived in Rome he found among the members of the imperial household, whether slaves or freedmen, some who had already embraced the new faith and eagerly welcomed his coming. His energy would be attracted to this important field of labour, where an opening was already made and he had secured valuable allies. At all events, writing from Rome to a distant church, he singles out from the general salutation the members of Cæsar's household², as a body both prominent enough to deserve a special salutation and so well known to his correspondents that no explanation was needed.

¹ Col. iv. 10, 11 οἵτινες ἐγενήθησάν μοι παρηγορία. Compare the expression quoted above from Acts xxviii. 15 εὐχαριστήσας τῷ Θεῷ ἐλάβεν θάρσος.

² Phil. i. 18 ἀλλὰ καὶ χαρήσομαι.

³ Juv. Sat. iii. 62 'Jam pridem Syrus in Tiberim defluxit Orontes etc.'

His success in the prætorium and the palace.

Occupying these two strongholds in the enemy's territory, he would not be slack to push his conquests farther. Of the social rank, of the race and religion from which his converts were chiefly drawn, we have no direct knowledge and can only hazard a conjecture. Yet we can hardly be wrong in assuming that the Church was not generally recruited from the higher classes of society and that the recruits were for the most part Greeks rather than Romans.

Of the fact that the primitive Church of the metropolis before and after St Paul's visit was chiefly Greek, there is satisfactory evidence³. The salutations in the Roman letter contain very few but Greek names, and even the exceptions hardly imply the Roman birth of their possessors. The Greek nation-

Greek nationality of the Roman Church.

¹ Phil. i. 13. See the detached note.

² Phil. iv. 22.

³ The Greek origin of the Roman Church is now generally allowed by the best writers. See for instance Westcott History of the Canon p. 215 sq., and Milman Latin Christianity i. p. 27 sqq. (1863).

ality of this church in the succeeding ages is still more clearly seen. Her early bishops for several generations with very few exceptions bear Greek names. All her literature for nearly two centuries is Greek. The first Latin version of the Scriptures was made not for Rome, but for the provinces, especially for Africa. Even later, the ill-spelt, ill-written inscriptions of the catacombs, with their strange intermingling of Greek and Latin characters, show that the church was not yet fully nationalised. Doubtless among St Paul's converts were many who spoke Latin as their mother tongue: the soldiers of the prætorian guard for instance would perhaps be more Italian than Greek. But these were neither the more numerous nor the more influential members of the Church. The Greeks were the most energetic, as they were also the most intelligent and enquiring of the middle classes in Rome at this time. The successful tradesmen, the skilled artisans, the confidential servants and retainers of noble houses—almost all the activity and enterprise of the common people whether for good or for evil—were Greek¹. Against the superior versatility of these foreign intruders the native population was powerless, and a generation later the satirist complains indignantly that Rome is no longer Roman². From this rank in life, from the middle and lower classes of society, it seems probable that the Church drew her largest reinforcements. The members of the Roman Church saluted in St Paul's Epistle could assuredly boast no aristocratic descent, whether from the proud patrician or the equally proud plebeian families. They bear upstart names, mostly Greek, sometimes borrowed from natural objects, sometimes adopted from a pagan hero or divinity, sometimes descriptive of personal qualities or advantages, here and there the surnames of some noble family to which they were perhaps attached as slaves or freedmen, but hardly in any case bearing the stamp of high Roman antiquity³. Of Rome, not less than

Social rank of the early converts.

¹ See especially Juv. Sat. iii. 73—
30. Comp. Friedländer Sittengeschichte
Roms i. p. 60 sq. (ed. 2).

² Juv. Sat. iii. 60 'Non possum ferre, Quirites, Græcam urbem.'

³ Examples of these different classes of Corinth, it must have been true, that 'not many wise after the flesh, not many powerful, not many high-born' were called¹.

Not many, and yet perhaps a few. On what grounds and with what truth the great Stoic philosopher and statesman has been claimed as a signal triumph of the Gospel I shall have to consider hereafter. Report has swollen the list of Roman converts with other names scarcely less famous for their virtues or their vices. The poet Lucan, the philosopher Epictetus, the powerful freedmen Narcissus and Epaphroditus, the emperor's mistresses Acte and Poppæa², a strange medley of good and bad, have been swept by tradition or conjecture into that capacious drag-net which 'gathers of every kind.' For such conversions, highly improbable in themselves, there is not a shadow of evidence. Yet one illustrious convert at least seems to have been added to the Church about this time. Pomponia Græcina, the wife of Plautius the conqueror of Britain, was arraigned of 'foreign superstition.' Delivered over to a domestic tribunal according to ancient usage, she was tried by her husband in presence of her relations, and was pronounced by him innocent. Her grave and sad demeanour (for she never appeared but in a mourning garb) was observed by all. The untimely and cruel death of her friend Julia had drawn a cloud over her life, which was never dissipated³. Coupled with the charge already mentioned, this notice suggests that shunning society she had sought consolation under her deep sorrow in the duties and hopes of the Gospel⁴. At all events a generation later Christianity had worked its way even into the

Converts
from the higher classes.

Pomponia Græcina.

of names among the Roman Christians are: Stachys; Hermes, Nereus; Epænetus, Ampliatus, Urbanus; Julia, Claudia (2 Tim. iv. 21).

¹ 1 Cor. i. 26.

² See Fleury Saint Paul et Sénèque II. p. 109, and the references there given.

³ Tac. Ann. xiii. 32. The trial took place in the year 57 or 58, i.e. about the time when the Epistle to the Romans was written, and some three years before St Paul's arrival in Rome.

⁴ The 'superstitio externa' of Tacitus in this passage has been explained by Lipsius and others after him as referring to Christianity. See especially Merivale's History of the Romans VI. p. 273.

Clemens and Domi-
tilla.

imperial family. Flavius Clemens and his wife Flavia Domitilla, both cousins of Domitian, were accused of 'atheism' and condemned by the emperor. Clemens had only just resigned office as consul; and his sons had been nominated successors to the empire. The husband was put to death; the wife banished to one of the islands. Allowing that the emperor sacrificed his kinsman on a 'most trivial charge,' the Roman biographer yet withholds his sympathy from the unoffending victim as a man of 'contemptible indolence'. One whose prejudice or ignorance

¹ Sueton. Domit. 15 'Flavium Clemensem patrualem suum contemptissimæ inertię...repente ex tenuissima suspicione tantum non in ipso ejus consularu interemit': Dion Cass. lxxvii. 14 *κάν τῷ αὐτῷ ἔτει ἄλλους τε πολλοὺς καὶ τὸν Φλαυίον Κλήμεντα ὑπατεύοντα, καίπερ ἀνεψίων ὄντα καὶ γυναικα καὶ αὐτὴν συγγενὴ ἑαυτοῦ Φλαυίαν Δομιτίλλαν ἔχοντα, κατέσφαξεν ὁ Δομιτιανός· ἐπηνέχθη δὲ ἀμφοῖν ἐγκλημα ἀθεότητος, ὑφ' ἧς καὶ ἄλλοι ἐς τὰ Ἰουδαίων ἔθνη ἐξοκέλοντες πολλοὶ κατεδικάσθησαν, καὶ οἱ μὲν ἀπέθανον οἱ δὲ τῶν γούν οὐσιῶν ἐστερήθησαν· ἡ δὲ Δομιτίλλα ὑπερῶρισθη μόνον ἐς Πανδατερίαν. Atheism was the common charge brought against the early Christians. Similarly Eusebius, H. E. iii. 18, refers to heathen historians as relating (with an exact notice of the date, the fifteenth year of Domitian) the persecution of the Christians, and more especially the banishment of Flavia Domitilla, the niece of Flavius Clemens (ἐξ ἀδελφῆς γεγονυῖαν Φλαυίου Κλήμεντος) one of the actual consuls, to the island of Pontia, τῆς ἐς Χριστὸν μαρτυρίας ἔνεκεν. The heathen writer especially intended here is one Bruttius, as appears from another passage in Eusebius Chron. p. 382 (Mai) sub anno 95, 'Scribit Bruttius plurimos Christianorum sub Domitiano fecisse martyrium: inter quos et Flaviam Domitillam, Flavii Clementis consulis ex sorore neptem, in insulam Pontiam rele-*

gatam quia se Christianam esse testata est.' This Bruttius is not improbably the Præsens with whom the younger Pliny corresponds (Epist. vii. 3), Præsens being a cognomen of the Bruttii. On the various persons bearing this name see Lardner's Testimonies of Ancient Heathens xii. De Rossi's archaeological researches bearing on this subject (Roma Sotterranea i. p. 266) must not be overlooked.

It will be seen that the account of Bruttius (or Eusebius) differs from that of Dion both in the place of exile and in the relationship of Domitilla to Clemens. Hence many writers have supposed that two Domitillas, aunt and niece, were banished by Domitian: so recently Imhof Domitianus p. 116. The calendar also commemorates a Domitilla as a virgin and martyr, thus distinguishing her from the wife of Clemens: see Tillemont Hist. Eccl. ii. p. 124 sq. Yet it can hardly be doubtful that one and the same person is intended in these notices. Pontia and Pandateria are neighbouring islands: and the different accounts of her relationship may be explained very easily by the carelessness of Eusebius or some early transcriber. In the original text of Bruttius the words corresponding to 'Flavii Clementis' probably signified 'the wife of Flavius Clemens,' while those translated 'ex sorore neptem' described her relationship not to Clemens but to Domitiallowed him to see in Christianity only a 'mischievous superstition'¹ would not be very favourably impressed by a convert to the new faith, debarred by his principles from sharing the vicious amusements of his age, and perhaps also in the absorbing contemplation of his higher destinies too forgetful of the necessary forms of social and political life. There seems no reason to doubt that Clemens and Domitilla were converts to the Gospel².

It is impossible to close this notice of St Paul's captivity without casting a glance at the great catastrophe which overwhelmed the Roman Church soon after his release. The Nero-The Neronian persecution
explained
away.nian persecution, related on the authority of Tacitus and Suetonius and embodied as a cardinal article in the historic creed of the Church from the earliest times, has latterly shared the fate of all assumed facts and received dogmas. The historian of the 'Decline and Fall' was the first to question the truth of this persecution. 'The obscurity as well as the innocence of the Christians,' wrote Gibbon, 'should have shielded them from Nero's indignation and even from his notice.' Accordingly he supposed that the real sufferers were not Christians but Jews, not the disciples of the true Christ but the dupes of some false Christ, the followers not of Jesus the Nazarene but of Judas the Gaulonite. It might easily happen, so he argued, that Tacitus, writing a generation later when the Christians, now a numerous body, had been singled out as the objects of judicial investigation, should transfer to them 'the guilt and the sufferings which he might with far greater truth and justice have attributed to a sect whose odious memory was almost extinguished'³. An able living writer also, the author of an. When Philostratus, Apoll. Vit. viii. 25, speaks of the wife of Clemens as the sister of the emperor, he confuses her with another Domitilla no longer living.

¹ Sueton. Nero 16 'superstitio nova ac malefica.'

² So even Gibbon, who says (c. xvi), 'The guilt imputed to their charge was that of Atheism and Jewish manners;

a singular association of ideas, which cannot with any propriety be applied except to the Christians etc.' So too Baur Paulus p. 472. Early in the second century the Roman Christians are so influential that Ignatius fears lest their intercession may rob him of the crown of martyrdom.

³ Decline and Fall c. xvi.

the 'History of the Romans under the Empire'¹, paying more deference to ancient authorities, yet feeling this difficulty, though in a less degree, suggests another solution. He supposes that the persecution was directed in the first instance against Jewish fanatics²; that the persons thus assailed strove to divert the popular fury by informing against the Christians; that the Christians confessed their allegiance to a King of their own in 'a sense which their judges did not care to discriminate'; that in consequence they were condemned and suffered; and finally, that later writers, having only an indistinct knowledge of the facts, confined the persecution directed against Jews and Christians alike to the latter, who nevertheless were not the principal victims. If I felt the difficulty which this suggestion is intended to remove, I should be disposed to accept the solution. But I do not feel justified in setting aside the authority of both Tacitus and Suetonius in a case like this, where the incident recorded must have happened in their own life-time; an incident moreover not transacted within the recesses of the palace or by a few accomplices sworn to secrecy, but open and notorious, affecting the lives of many and gratifying the fanatical fury of a whole populace.

Testimony
of Roman historians.

Allusion in the Apocalypse.

But besides the distinct testimony of the Roman historians, there is, I venture to think, strong though indirect evidence which has generally been overlooked. How otherwise is the imagery of the Apocalypse to be explained? Babylon, the great harlot, the woman seated on seven hills, 'drunken with the blood of the saints and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus'³; what is the historical reference in these words, if the Neronian persecution be a figment of later date? It is plain that some great change has passed over the relations between the Gospel and the Empire, since the days when St Paul sought protection and obtained justice from the soldiers and the magistrates of

¹ vi. p. 280.

² A later notice quoted below (p. 329) mentions the Jews also as sufferers.

³ Rev. xvii. 6. The argument in the text loses some of its force, if the later date be assigned to the Apocalypse; for the passage might then be supposed to refer to the persecution of Domitian.

Rome. The genial indolence of Gallio, the active interposition of Claudius Lysias, the cold impartiality of Festus, afford no explanation of such language. Roman justice or Roman indifference has been exchanged meanwhile for Roman oppression.

And after all the sole ground for scepticism is the assumed insignificance of the Roman Church at this epoch, its obscure station and scanty numbers. But what are the facts of the case? Full six years before the Neronian outbreak the brethren of Rome are so numerous and so influential as to elicit from St Paul the largest and most important letter which he ever wrote. In this letter he salutes a far greater number of persons than in any other. Its tone shows that the Roman Church was beset by all the temptations intellectual and moral, to which only a large and various community is exposed. In the three years which elapsed before he arrived in the metropolis their numbers must in the natural course of events have increased largely. When he lands on the shores of Italy, he finds a Christian community established even at Puteoli¹. For two whole years from this time the Gospel is preached with assiduous devotion by St Paul and his companions; while the zeal of the Judaizers, whetted by rivalry, is roused to unwonted activity in the same cause. If besides this we allow for the natural growth of the church in the year intervening after the Apostle's release, it will be no surprise that the Christian community had by this time attained sufficient prominence to provoke the indiscriminate revenge of a people unnerved by a recent catastrophe and suddenly awakened to the existence of a mysterious and rapidly increasing sect.

For it is in the very nature of a panic that it should take alarm at some vague peril of which it cannot estimate the character or dimensions. The first discovery of this strange community would be the most terrible shock to Roman feeling.

The Roman populace seized by a panic.

¹ Acts xxviii. 14. The traffic with Alexandria and the East would draw to Puteoli a large number of Oriental sailors and merchants. The inscriptions bear testimony to the presence of Jews in these parts: see an article by Minervini in the Bullett. Archeol. Napol. Feb. 1855. For the reference to this article I am indebted to Friedländer Sittengeschichte Roms II. p. 65. See also his note on the Pompeian inscription III. p. 529.

How wide might not be its ramifications, how numerous its adherents? Once before in times past Roman society had been appalled by a similar revelation. At this crisis men would call to mind how their forefathers had stood aghast at the horrors of the Bacchanalian conspiracy; how the canker still unsuspected was gnawing at the heart of public morality, and the foundations of society were well-nigh sapped, when the discovery was accidentally made; so that only the promptest and most vigorous measures had saved the state¹. And was not this a conspiracy of the same kind? These Christians were certainly atheists, for they rejected all the gods alike; they were traitors also, for they swore allegiance to another king besides Cæsar. But there were mysterious whispers of darker horrors than these; hideous orgies which rivalled the loathsome banquet of Thyestes, shameless and nameless profligacies which recalled the tragedy of the house of Laius². To us, who know what the Gospel has been and is, who are permitted to look back on the past history of the Church and forward to her eternal destinies, such infatuation may seem almost incredible; and yet this mode of representation probably does no injustice to Roman feeling at the time. The public mind paralysed by a great calamity has not strength to reflect or to argue. An idea once seizing it possesses it wholly. The grave and reserved demeanour of the Christians would only increase the popular suspicion. The apparent innocence of the sect would seem but a cloak thrown over their foul designs, which betrayed themselves occasionally by denunciations of Roman life or by threats of a coming vengeance³.

¹ For the history of the Bacchanalian conspiracy detected in the year B. C. 186 see Livy xxxix. 8 sq. In reading this account it is impossible not to notice the resemblance of the crimes apparently proved against these Bacchanalians with the foul charges recklessly hurled at the Christians: see e.g. Justin Apol. i. 26, Tertull. Apol. 7, Minuc. Felix, 9, 28. [The passage in the text was written without any recollection that Gibbon had mentioned the Bacchanalian conspiracy in the same connexion.]

² See the letter of the Churches of Lyons and Vienne in Euseb. H. E. v. 1. § 14 κατεψεύσαντο ἡμῶν Θυέστεια δείπνα καὶ Οἰδιποδελους μίξεις καὶ ὅσα μήτε λαλεῖν μήτε νοεῖν θέμεις ἡμῖν, Athenag. Legat. 3 τρία ἐπιφημιζουσιν ἡμῖν ἐγκλήματα, ἀθεότητα, Θυέστεια δείπνα, Οἰδιποδελους μίξεις, ib. 31, Theoph. ad Aut. iii. 4, 15, Tertull. ad Nat. i. 7.

³ See the suggestion of Dean Milman, History of Christianity II. p. 456 (1863).

The general silence of the Roman satirists is indeed a significant fact, but it cannot fairly be urged to show the obscurity of the Church at the date of the Neronian persecution. If no mention is made of Christianity in the short poems of Persius, it will be remembered that he died nearly two years before this event. If Juvenal and Martial, who in the next generation 'have dashed in with such glaring colours Jews, Greeks, and Egyptians¹,' banish the Christians to the far background of their picture², the fact must not be explained by the comparative insignificance of the latter³. We may safely infer from the narratives of Pliny and Tacitus that at this time they were at least as important and influential as the Jews. But in fact they offered very poor material for caricature. So far as they presented any salient features which the satirist might turn to ridicule, these were found in the Jews to a still greater degree. Where they differed, their distinctive characteristics would seem entirely negative to the superficial glance of the heathen. Even Lucian, who satirizes all things in heaven and earth, living at a time when Christians abounded everywhere, can say nothing worse of them than that they are good-natured charitable people, not overwise and easily duped by charlatans⁴.

Silence of the Roman satirists
explained.

But how did this vast religious movement escape the notice of philosophical writers, who, if they were blind to its spiritual import, must at least have recognised in it a striking moral phenomenon? If the Christians were so important, it is urged, how are they not mentioned by Seneca, 'though Seneca is full of the tenets of the philosophers⁵'? To this particular

Reticence
of the philosophers.

So also De Pressensé Trois Premiers Siècles II. p. 97.

¹ Merivale VI. p. 277.

² Mart. x. 25, Juv. i. 155, viii. 235. Even in these passages the allusion is doubtful.

³ The following instance will show how little dependence can be placed on this line of argument. Dean Milman (History of Christianity, III. p. 352) writes: 'M. Beugnot has pointed out one remarkable characteristic of Claudian's poetry and of the times—his extraordinary religious indifference. Here is a poet writing at the actual crisis of the complete triumph of the new religion and the visible extinction of the old: if we may so speak, a strictly historical poet... Yet... no one would know the existence of Christianity at that period of the world by reading the works of Claudian.'

⁴ Lucian De Mort. Peregr. § 11 sq.

⁵ Merivale, I. c.

question it is perhaps sufficient to reply, that most of Seneca's works were written before the Christians on any showing had attracted public notice. But the enquiry may be pushed farther, and a general answer will be suggested. How, we may well ask, are they not mentioned by Plutarch, though Plutarch discusses almost every possible question of philosophical or social interest, and flourished moreover at the very time, when by their large and increasing numbers, by their unflinching courage and steady principle, they had become so formidable, that the proprætor of Bithynia in utter perplexity applies to his imperial master for instructions how to deal with a sect thus passive and yet thus revolutionary? How is it again, that Marcus Aurelius, the philosophical emperor, dismisses them in his writings with one brief scornful allusion¹, though he had been flooded with apologies and memorials on their behalf, and though they served in large numbers in the very army which he commanded in person²? The silence of these later philosophers at least cannot be ascribed to ignorance; and some other explanation must be sought. May we not fairly conclude that, like others under similar circumstances, they considered a contemptuous reticence the safest, if not the keenest, weapon to employ against a religious movement, which was working its way upwards from the lower grades of society, and which they viewed with alarm and misgiving not unmingled with secret respect³?

assumed
for prudential reasons.

¹ M. Anton. xi. 3 μὴ κατὰ ψιλὴν παράταξιν (from mere obstinacy), ὥς οἱ Χριστιανοί, ἀλλὰ λελογισμένως καὶ σεμνῶς καί, ὥστε καὶ ἄλλον πείσαι, ἀπαγγέδωσ.

² Thus much at least may be inferred from the story of the thundering legion: see especially Mosheim De Rebus Christianis. sæc. 2. § xvii. and Lardner Testimonies etc. xv. § 3.

³ St Augustine de Civ. Dei vi. 11 says of Seneca, after mentioning this philosopher's account of the Jews,

'Christianos tamen, jam tunc Judæis inimicissimos, in neutram partem commemorare ausus est, ne vel laudaret contra suæ patriæ veterem consuetudinem vel reprehenderet contra propriam forsitan voluntatem.' Seneca indeed would hardly be expected to mention the Christians, for most of his works were perhaps written before the new sect had attracted the attention of his fellow-countrymen. But some such motive as Augustine here suggests must have sealed the lips of the later philosophers.

II.

ORDER OF THE EPISTLES OF THE CAPTIVITY.

ST PAUL remained in captivity between four and five years (A.D. 58—63); the first half of this period being spent at Cæsarea, the second at Rome. While thus a prisoner he wrote four epistles, to the Philippians, to the Colossians, to the Ephesians, to Philemon. Though a few critics have assigned one or more of these epistles to his confinement at Cæsarea¹, there are serious objections to this view²; and the vast majority of writers

Four epistles written from Rome.

¹ The three epistles are assigned to the Cæsarean captivity by Böttger (Beitr. ii. p. 47 sqq.), Thiersch (Kirche im apost. Zeit. p. 176), Reuss (Gesch. der heil. Schriften § 114), Meyer (Ephes. Einl. § 2) and others: the Epistle to the Philippians by Paulus (Progr. Jen. 1799, and Heidelb. Jahrb. 1825. H. 5, referred to by Bleek), Böttger (l.c.), and Thiersch (ib. p. 212), while Rilliet (introd. § 11 and note on i. 13) speaks doubtfully. The oldest tradition or conjecture dated all four epistles from Rome: and this is the opinion of most modern writers. Oeder alone (Progr. Onold. 1731: see Wolf Cur. Phil. iii. p. 168) dates the Philippians from Corinth during St Paul's first visit.

² Reasons for dating the three epistles from Cæsarea are given fully in Meyer (Ephes. Einl. § 2). I cannot attach any weight to them. For the Epistle to the Philippians there is at least this prima facie case, that the mention of the prætorium in Phil. i. 13 would then be explained by the statement in Acts xxiii. 35, that St Paul was confined in 'the prætorium of Herod.' But the expression 'throughout the prætorium' (ἐν ὅλῳ τῷ πραιτωρίῳ), while it implies a wider space than the palace or official residence of Herod, is easily explained by the circumstances of St Paul's connexion with the imperial guards at Rome: see above, p. 9. On the other hand there are many serious objections to Cæsarea as the place of writing. (1) The notice of Cæsar's household (Phil. iv. 22) cannot without much straining of language and facts be made to apply to Cæsarea. (2) St Paul's account of his progress (i. 12 sq.) loses all its force on this supposition. He is obviously speaking of some place of great consequence, where the Gospel had received a new and remarkable development. Cæsarea does not satisfy these conditions. It was after agree in placing all four at a later date, after the Apostle had been removed thence to Rome.

The Philippian letter stands apart; the other three are linked together.

Assuming then that they were all written from Rome, we have next to investigate their relative dates. And here again the question simplifies itself. It seems very clear, and is generally allowed, that the three epistles last mentioned were written and despatched at or about the same time, while the letter to the Philippians stands alone. Of the three thus connected the Epistle to the Colossians is the link between the other two. On the one hand its connection with the Epistle to the Ephesians is established by a remarkable resemblance of style and matter, and by the fact of its being entrusted to the same messenger Tychicus¹. On the other, it is shown to synchronize with the letter to Philemon by more than one coincidence: Onesimus accompanies both epistles²; in both salutations are sent to Archippus³; in both the same persons are mentioned as St Paul's companions at the time of writing⁴.

all not a very important place. It had been evangelized by the Apostles of the Circumcision. The first heathen convert Cornelius lived there. As a chief seaport town of Palestine, the great preachers of the Gospel were constantly passing to and fro through it. Altogether we may suppose it to have received more attention in proportion to its size than any other place; and the language of St Paul seems wholly inapplicable to a town with this antecedent history. (3) When this epistle is written, he is looking forward to his speedy release and purposes a visit to Macedonia (i. 26, ii. 24: compare Philem. 22). Now there is no reason to suppose that he expected this at Cæsarea. For what were the circumstances of the case? He had gone up to Jerusalem, intending immediately afterwards to visit Rome. While at Jerusalem he is apprehended on a frivolous charge and imprisoned. When at length he is brought to trial, he boldly appeals to Cæsar. May we not infer that this had been his settled determination from the first? that he considered it more prudent to act thus than to stake his safety on the capricious justice of the provincial governor? that at all events he hoped thereby to secure the fulfilment of his long-cherished design of preaching the Gospel in the metropolis?

These considerations seem sufficient to turn the scale in favour of Rome, as against Cæsarea, in the case of the Epistle to the Philippians. As regards the other three, I shall endeavour to give reasons for placing them later than the Philippian letter: and if so, they also must date from Rome. At all events there is no sufficient ground for abandoning the common view.

¹ Col. iv. 7, Ephes. vi. 21.

² Col. iv. 9, Philem. 10—12.

³ Col. iv. 17, Philem. 2. Hence it may be inferred that they went to the same place.

⁴ Philem. 1, 23, 24, Col. i. 1, iv.

The question then, which I propose to discuss in the following pages, is this: whether the Epistle to the Philippians should be placed early in the Roman captivity and the three epistles later; or whether conversely the three epistles were written first, and the Philippian letter afterwards. The latter is the prevailing view among the vast majority of recent writers, German and English, with one or two important exceptions¹. I shall attempt to show that the arguments generally alleged in its favour will not support the conclusions: while on the other hand there are reasons for placing the Philippians early and the three epistles late, which in the absence of any decisive evidence on the other side must be regarded as weighty.

The arguments in favour of the later date of the Philippian letter, as compared with the other three, are drawn from four considerations: (1) From the progress of Christianity in Rome, as exhibited in this epistle; (2) From a comparison of the names of St Paul's associates mentioned in the different epistles; (3) From the length of time required for the communications between Philippi and Rome; (4) From the circumstances of St Paul's imprisonment. These arguments will be considered in order.

1. It is evident that the Christians in Rome form a large and important body when the Epistle to the Philippians is written. The Gospel has effected a lodgment even in the imperial palace. The bonds of the Apostle have become known not only 'throughout the prætorium' but 'to all the rest. There is a marvellous activity among the disciples of the new

Was it written before or after the others?

Arguments for its later date stated and examined.

1. Progress of the Roman Church.

7—14. The names common to both are Timotheus, Epaphras, Marcus, Aristarchus, Demas, Luke. Tychicus and Jesus the Just are mentioned in the Epistle to the Colossians alone.

¹ In Germany, De Wette, Schrader, Hemsen, Anger, Credner, Neander, Wieseler, Meyer, Wiesinger; in England, Davidson, Alford, Conybeare and Howson, Wordsworth, Ellicott, Eadie. The exceptions are Bleek (Einkl. in das Neue Test. pp. 430, 460) who considers the data insufficient to decide but treats the Philippians first in order; and Ewald (Sendschreiben etc. pp. 431 sq., 547), who however rejects the Epistle to the Ephesians, and supposes the remaining three to have been written about the same time. The older English critics for the most part (e.g. Usher and Pearson) placed the Philippians first, without assigning reasons.

faith: 'In every way Christ is preached.' All this it is argued requires a very considerable lapse of time.

Its condition before St Paul's coming.

This argument has to a great extent been met already¹. It is highly probable, as I have endeavoured to show, that St Paul found a flourishing though unorganized Church, when he arrived in Rome. The state of things exhibited in the Epistle to the Romans, the probable growth of Christianity in the interval, the fact of his finding a body of worshippers even at Puteoli, combine to support this inference. It has been suggested also (and reasons will be given hereafter for this suggestion) that the 'members of Cæsar's household' were, at least in some cases, not St Paul's converts after his arrival but older disciples already confessing Christ. And again, if when he wrote he could already count many followers among the prætorian soldiers, it is here especially that we might expect to see the earliest and most striking results of his preaching, for with these soldiers he was forced to hold close and uninterrupted intercourse day and night from the very first.

His language not to be pressed.

Nor must the expression that his 'bonds had become known to all the rest,' of the Roman people be rigorously pressed. It is contrary to all sound rules of interpretation to look for statistical precision in words uttered in the fulness of gratitude and hope. The force of the expression must be measured by the Apostle's language elsewhere. In writing to the Thessalonians for instance, only a few months after they have heard the first tidings of the Gospel, he expresses his joy that 'from them has sounded forth the word of the Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but in every place their faith to Godward is spread abroad².'

The notice suggests an opposite inference.

Indeed this very passage in the Philippian letter, which has been taken to favour a later date because it announces the progress of the Gospel in Rome, appears much more natural, if written soon after his arrival. The condition of things which it describes is novel and exceptional. It is evidently the first awakening of dormant influences for good or evil, the stirring up of latent emotions of love, emulation, strife, godless jealousy and godly zeal, by the presence of the great Apostle among the Christians of Rome. This is hardly the language he would have used after he had spent two whole years in the metropolis, when the antagonism of enemies and the devotion of friends had settled down into a routine of hatred or of affection. Nor is the form of the announcement such as might be expected in a letter addressed so long after his arrival to correspondents with whom he had been in constant communication meanwhile.

¹ See above, p. 25.

² 1 Thess. i. 8.

2. The argument drawn from the names of St Paul's associates is as follows. We learn from the Acts that the Apostle was accompanied on his voyage to Rome by Luke and Aristarchus¹. Now their names occur in the salutations of the Epistles to the Colossians and to Philemon², but not in the Epistle to the Philippians. It seems probable therefore that the letter last mentioned was written later, his two companions having meanwhile separated from the Apostle.

2. St Paul's associates.

An argument from silence is always of questionable force. In order to be valid, it ought to apply to all these epistles alike. Yet in the Epistle to the Ephesians no mention is made of Aristarchus and Luke, and what is more remarkable, none of Timothy, though it was written at the same time with the letters to Colossæ and to Philemon. The omission in any particular case may be due to special reasons³.

General answer to this argument.

Nor is it difficult to account for this silence. In the Epistle to the Philippians St Paul throws his salutation into a general form; 'The brethren that are with me greet you.' In this expression it is plain that he refers to his own personal companions: for he adds immediately afterwards, 'All the brethren,'

¹ Acts xxvii. 2.

² Col. iv. 10, 14, Philem. 24.

³ The doubtful force of such arguments from silence is illustrated by another case occurring in these epistles. Jesus Justus is mentioned in the Epistle to the Colossians (iv. 11), but not in the letter to Philemon. Of this omission no account can be given. There is the highest a priori probability that he would be mentioned either in both letters or in neither, for they both were sent to the same place and by the same messenger.

Aristarchus.

St Luke.

including the resident members of the Roman Church, 'but especially they of the household of Cæsar greet you!'. If Aristarchus and Luke were with him, they might well be comprehended in this general salutation. Of Aristarchus the most probable account, I think, is, that he parted from St Paul at Myra, and therefore did not arrive in Rome with the Apostle but rejoined him there subsequently². If this be the case, the absence of his name in the Philippian Epistle, so far as it deserves to be considered at all, makes rather for than against the earlier date. On the other hand St Luke certainly accompanied the Apostle to Rome: and his probable connexion with

¹ Phil. iv. 21, 22.

² St Luke's account is this: 'Embarking on an Adramyttian vessel, intending to sail to (or along) the coasts of Asia (μέλλοντες πλεῖν τοὺς κατὰ τὴν Ἀσίαν τόπους) we put out to sea, Aristarchus a Macedonian of Thessalonica being with us (Acts xxvii. 2).' When they arrived at Myra, the centurion 'found an Alexandrian vessel sailing to Italy and put them (ἡμᾶς) on board.' Now it is generally (I believe, universally) assumed that Aristarchus accompanied St Paul and St Luke to Rome. But what are the probabilities of the case? The vessel in which they start belongs to Adramyttium a seaport of Mysia. If they had remained in this ship, as seems to have been their original intention, they would have hugged the coast of Asia, and at length (perhaps taking another vessel at Adramyttium) have reached Macedonia: and if they landed, as they probably would, at Neapolis, they would have taken the great Egnatian road through Philippi. Along this road they would have travelled to Dyrrhachium and thence have crossed the straits to Italy. Thus a long voyage in the open seas would have been avoided: a voyage peculiarly dangerous at this late season of the year, as the result proved. Such in fact was the route of Ignatius, who likewise was taken a prisoner to Rome and appears also to have made this journey late in the year. It was the accident of falling in at Myra with an Alexandrian ship sailing straight for Italy which induced the centurion to abandon his original design, for the sake, as would appear, of greater expedition. But the historian adds when mentioning this design, 'one Aristarchus a Macedonian of Thessalonica being with us.' Does he not, by inserting this notice in this particular place, intend his readers to understand (or at least understand himself) that Aristarchus accompanied them on the former part of their route, because he was on his way home? If so, when their plans were changed at Myra, he would part from them, continuing in the Adramyttian vessel, and so reach his destination.

I have taken the received reading μέλλοντες πλεῖν, 'as we were to sail.' The greater number of the best authorities however read μέλλοντι πλεῖν, 'as it (the vessel) was to sail.' If the latter be adopted, the passage is silent about the purpose of the centurion and his prisoners, but the probable destination of Aristarchus is unaffected. The same copies which read μέλλοντι for the most Philippi¹ suggests at least a presumption that he would be mentioned by name, if he were still with St Paul. Again, when in another passage² the Apostle declaring his intention of sending Timotheus to Philippi adds that he has 'no one like-minded who will naturally care for them, for all pursue their own' pleasures and interests, we cannot suppose that 'Luke the beloved physician' is included in this condemnation. It may reasonably be conjectured however that St Luke had left Italy to return thither at a later period, or that he was absent from Rome on some temporary mission, or at least that he was too busily occupied to undertake this journey to Philippi. Even if we assume Rome to have been the head-quarters of the evangelist during the whole of St Paul's stay, there must have been many churches in the neighbourhood and in more distant parts of Italy which needed constant supervision; and after Timotheus there was probably no one among the Apostle's companions to whom he could entrust any important mission with equal confidence.

3. Again it is urged that the numerous communications between Philippi and Rome implied by the notices in this epistle in themselves demand a very considerable lapse of time after the Apostle's arrival.

3. Journeys between Philippi and Rome.

The narrative however requires at most two journeys from Rome to Philippi and two from Philippi to Rome; as follows.

Four at most are required,

- (1) From Rome to Philippi. A messenger bears tidings to the Philippians of St Paul's arrival in Rome.
- (2) From Philippi to Rome. The Philippians send contributions to St Paul by the hand of Epaphroditus³.
- (3) From Rome to Philippi. A messenger arrives at the latter place with tidings of Epaphroditus' illness.

part also insert εἰς before τοὺς κατὰ τὴν Ἀσίαν κ.τ.λ. It seems probable therefore that there has been a confusion between μέλλοντες and μέλλοντι εἰς. The best authorities are certainly in favour of the latter. On the other hand there would be a temptation to alter μέλλοντες in order to adapt it to subsequent facts.

¹ See below, pp. 52, 58.

² Phil. ii. 19—21.

³ Phil. ii. 25, iv. 18.

- (4) From Philippi to Rome. Epaphroditus is informed that the news of his illness has reached the Philippians¹.

The return of Epaphroditus to Philippi cannot be reckoned as a separate journey, for it seems clear that he was the bearer of St Paul's letter².

and this number may be reduced.

I say four journeys at most; for the number may well be halved without doing any violence to probability. As it has been already stated³, St Luke's narrative seems to imply that Aristarchus parted from the Apostle at Myra, coasted along Asia Minor, and so returned to his native town Thessalonica by the Egnatian road. On his way he would pass through Philippi, and from him the Philippians would learn that the Apostle had been removed from Cæsarea to Rome. Thus taking into account the delay of several months occasioned by the shipwreck and the sojourn in Malta, Epaphroditus might well arrive in Rome with the contributions from Philippi about the same time with the Apostle himself; and this without any inconvenient hurry. On this supposition two of the four journeys assumed to have taken place after St Paul's arrival may be dispensed with. Nor again does the expression 'he was grieved because ye heard that he was sick' necessarily imply that Epaphroditus had received definite information that the tidings of his illness had reached Philippi. He says nothing about the manner in which the Philippians had received the news. The Apostle's language seems to require nothing more than that a messenger had been despatched to Philippi with the tidings in question. This however is a matter of very little moment. On any showing some months must have elapsed after St Paul's arrival, before the letter to the Philippians was written. And this interval allows ample time for all the incidents, consider-

¹ Phil. ii. 26 ἐπιποθῶν ἦν πάντας ὑμᾶς [ἰδεῖν] καὶ ἀδελφονῶν διότι ἠκούσατε ὅτι ἡσθένησεν.

² Phil. ii. 25, 28, 29. The ἐπεμψα of ver. 28 is an epistolary aorist: comp.

Philem. 11, 12, where ἀπέπεμψα is said of Onesimus the bearer of the letter. See the note on Gal. vi. 11.

³ See above, p. 34, note 2.

ing that the communication between Rome and Philippi was constant and rapid¹.

4. Lastly, it is urged that the general tone of the Epistle to the Philippians accords better with a later stage of the Apostle's captivity. The degree of restraint now imposed upon the prisoner appears to be inconsistent with the liberty implied in the narrative of the Acts: the spirit of anxiety and sadness which pervades the letter is thought to accord ill with a period of successful labour. For these reasons the epistle is supposed to have been written after those two years of unimpeded progress with which St Luke's record closes, the Apostle having been removed meanwhile from his own hired house to the precincts of the prætorium, and placed in more rigorous confinement.

4. St Paul's personal condition.

Contrast with the Acts,

And the view thus suggested by the contrast which this and with

¹ A month would probably be a fair allowance of time for the journey between Rome and Philippi. The distance from Rome to Brundisium was 360 miles according to Strabo (vi. p. 283) or 358 according to the Antonine Itinerary (pp. 49, 51, 54, Parth. et Pind.). The distance from Dyrrhachium to Philippi was the same within a few miles; the journey from Dyrrhachium to Thessalonica being about 270 miles (267, Polybius in Strabo vii. p. 323; 269, Itin. Anton. p. 151; and 279, Tab. Peut.), and from Thessalonica to Philippi 100 miles (Itin. Anton. pp. 152, 157). The present text of Pliny understates it at 325 miles, H. N. iv. 18. Ovid expects his books to reach Rome from Brundisium before the tenth day without hurrying (Ep. Pont. iv. 5, 8, 'ut festinatum non faciatis iter'); while Horace moving very leisurely completes the distance in 16 days (Sat. i. 5). The voyage between Dyrrhachium and Brundisium ordinarily took a day: Cic. ad Att. iv. 1; comp. Appian i. p. 269 (ed. Bekker). The land transit on the Greek continent would probably not occupy much more time than on the Italian, the distances being the same. This calculation agrees with the notices in Cicero's letters. Cicero (if the dates can be trusted) leaves Brundisium on April 30th and arrives at Thessalonica on May 23rd (ad Att. iii. 8); but he travels leisurely and appears to have been delayed on the way. Again Atticus purposes starting from Rome on June 1st, and Cicero writing from Thessalonica on the 13th expects to see him 'propediem' (iii. 9). Again Cicero writing from Thessalonica on June 18th says that Atticus' letter has informed him of all that has happened at Rome up to May 25th (iii. 10). Lastly Cicero at Dyrrhachium receives on Nov. 27th a letter from Rome dated Nov. 12th (iii. 23). The sea route was more uncertain: but under favourable circumstances would be quicker than the journey by land, whether the course was by the gulf of Corinth or round the promontory of Malea. On the rate of sailing among the ancients see Friedländer Sittengeschichte Roms ii. p. 12, to whom I owe some of the above references.

the other epistles, epistle offers to St Luke's narrative is further supported by a comparison with the other letters written during his captivity. As distinguished from the remaining three, the Epistle to the Philippians is thought to wear a gloomier aspect and to indicate severer restraints and less hopeful prospects¹.

accounted for by contemporary history. At this point the aid of contemporary history is invoked. Have we not a sufficient account, it is asked, of the increased rigour of the Apostle's confinement in the appointment of the monster Tigellinus to succeed Burrus as commander of the imperial guards? Must not the well-known Jewish sympathies of Poppæa, now all-powerful as the emperor's consort, have darkened his prospects at the approaching trial?

Contrast with the Acts explained. The argument drawn from St Luke's narrative has been partially and incidently met already². It seems highly probable that the prætorium does not denote any locality, whether the barracks on the palatine or the camp without the city. Even if a local meaning be adopted, still it is neither stated nor implied that St Paul dwelt within the prætorium. If he did dwell there, he might nevertheless have occupied 'hired lodgings.' In the history, as in the letter, he is a prisoner in bonds. His external condition, as represented in the two writings, in no way differs. In tone, it is true, there is a strong contrast between St Luke's account and the language of St Paul himself: but this could hardly be otherwise. St Luke, as the historian of the Church, views events in the retrospect and deals chiefly with results, presenting the bright side of the picture, the triumph of the Church. St Paul, as the individual sufferer, writing at the moment and reflecting the agony of the struggle, paints the scene in darker colours, dwelling on his own sorrows. The Apostle's sufferings were in a great degree mental—the vexation of soul stirred up by unscrupulous opposition—the agony of suspense under his impending trial—his solicitude for the churches under his care—his sense of alacriorque et blandior cæteris.'

¹ So Alford (Prol. § iii. 5). But Bengel, 'summa epistolæ, gaudeo, gaudere'; and Grotius, 'Epistola lætior

² Above, p. 9, and on 'prætorium in i. 13.

responsibility—his yearning desire to depart and be with Christ. It was impossible that the historian should reproduce this state of feeling: he has not done so in other cases¹.

And again: comparing the language of the Philippian letter with the other epistles, it is difficult to see anything more than those oscillations of feeling which must be experienced daily under trying circumstances of responsibility or danger. All these epistles alike reveal alternations of joy and sadness, moments of depression and moments of exaltation, successive waves of hope and fear. If the tone of one epistle is less cheerful than another, this is a very insecure foundation on which to build the hypothesis of an entire change in the prisoner's condition.

Moreover arguments are sometimes alleged for the later date of the Philippian letter, which, though advanced for the same purpose, in reality neutralise those already considered. It is no longer to the prevailing gloom, but to the hopefulness of the Philippian letter, that the appeal is made. The Apostle is looking forward to his approaching trial and deliverance. He knows confidently that he shall abide and continue with the Philippians for their furtherance and joy of the faith: 'their rejoicing will abound by his coming to see them again²'; he 'trusts in the Lord that he shall visit them shortly³.' Such passages are, I think, a complete answer to those who represent the sadness of this epistle as in strong contrast to the brighter tone of the other three. Yet considered in themselves they might seem to imply the near approach of his trial, and so to favour the comparatively late date of the epistle. But here again we must pause. These expressions, even if as strong, are not stronger than the language addressed to Philemon, when the Apostle bids his friend 'prepare him a lodging,' hoping that 'through their prayers he shall be given to them⁴.' At many times doubtless during his long imprisonment, he expected his Contrast with the other epistles considered.

The argument neutralised by other passages.

¹ Compare for instance the agony of feeling expressed in the opening chapters of the Second Epistle to the Corinthians with the calm and unimpassioned account of the same period in St Luke.

² Phil. i. 25, 26.

³ Phil. ii. 24.

⁴ Philem. 22.

trial to come on. His life at this time was a succession of broken hopes and weary delays.

Political changes did not touch St Paul.

If this be so, we need not stop long to enquire how the political changes already noticed might possibly have affected St Paul's condition. A prisoner so mean in the eyes of the Roman world, a despised provincial, a religious fanatic—like Festus, they would see nothing more in him than this—was beneath the notice of a Tigellinus, intent on more ambitious and grander crimes. More plausible is the idea that Poppæa, instigated by the Jews, might have prejudiced the emperor against an offender whom they hated with a bitter hatred. Doubtless she might have done so. But, if she had interfered at all, why should she have been satisfied with delaying his trial or increasing his restraints, when she might have procured his condemnation and death? The hand reeking with the noblest blood of Rome would hardly refuse at her bidding to strike down a poor foreigner, who was almost unknown and would certainly be unavenged. From whatever cause, whether from ignorance or caprice or indifference or disdain, her influence, we may safely conclude, was not exerted to the injury of the Apostle.

The later date not established.

Such are the grounds on which the Epistle to the Philippians has been assigned to a later date than the others written from Rome. So far from establishing this conclusion they seem to afford at most a very slight presumption in its favour. On the other hand certain considerations have been overlooked, which in the absence of direct evidence on the opposite side are entitled to a hearing. They are founded on a comparison of the style and matter of these epistles with the epistles of the preceding and the following groups—with the letters of the third Apostolic journey on the one side, and the Pastoral Epistles on the other. The inference from such a comparison, if I mistake not, is twofold; we are led to place the Epistle to the Philippians as early as possible, and the Epistles to the Colossians and Ephesians as late as possible, consistently with other known facts and probabilities.

Argument for the earlier date.

I. Reasons

I. The characteristic features of its group are less strongly marked in the Epistle to the Philippians than in the others. Altogether in style and tone, as well as in its prominent ideas, it bears a much greater resemblance to the earlier letters, than do the Epistles to the Colossians and Ephesians¹. Thus it forms the link which connects these two epistles with those of the third apostolic journey. It represents an epoch of transition in the religious controversies of the age, or to speak more correctly, a momentary lull, a short breathing space, when one antagonistic error has been fought and overcome, and another is dimly foreseen in the future. The Apostle's great battle hitherto has been with Pharisaic Judaism; his great weapon the doctrine of grace. In the Epistle to the Philippians we have the spent wave of this controversy. In the third chapter the Apostle dwells with something like his former fulness on the contrast of faith and law, on the true and the false circumcision, on his own personal experiences as illustrating his theme. Henceforth when he touches on these topics, he will do so briefly and incidentally. Even now in his apostolic teaching, as in his inner life, he is 'forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before.' A new type of error is springing up—more speculative and less practical in its origin—which in one form or other mainly occupies his attention throughout the Epistles to the Colossians and Ephesians and the Pastoral Epistles; and which under the distinctive name of Gnosticism in its manifold and monstrous developments will disturb the peace of the Church for two centuries to come.

But of all the earlier letters it most nearly resembles the Epistle to the Romans, to which according to the view here maintained it stands next in chronological order. At least I do for placing the Philippians

early.

Resemblance to the earlier group, especially to the Romans.

¹ This fact is reflected in the opinions entertained respecting the genuineness of these epistles. While the authorship of the Epistle to the Philippians has been questioned only by the most extravagant criticism, more temperate writers have hesitated to accept the Colossians and Ephesians. This hesitation, though unwarranted, is instructive. The special characteristics of the main group (1, 2 Corinthians, Galatians, Romans) have been taken as the standard of the Apostle's style, when they rather indicate a particular phase in it. The Epistle to the Philippians has been spared because it reproduces these features more nearly than the other two.

not think that so many and so close parallels can be produced with any other epistle, as the following :

PHILIPPIANS.

Parallel
passages.

(1) i. 3, 4, 7, 8. I thank my God in every mention of you at all times in every request of mine ...as ye all are partakers with me in grace (τῆς χάριτος): for God is my witness, how I long for you all in the bowels of Christ Jesus.

(2) i. 10. That ye may approve the things that are excellent.

(3) ii. 8, 9, 10, 11. He became obedient unto death...wherefore God also highly exalted Him...that in the name of Jesus every knee may bow of things in heaven and things on earth and things under the earth, and every tongue may confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, &c.

(4) ii. 2—4. That ye may have the same mind, having the same love, united in soul, having one mind: (Do) nothing in factiousness or vainglory, but in humility holding one another superior to yourselves.

(5) iii. 3. For we are the circumcision, who serve (λατρεύοντες) by the Spirit of God (θεοῦ v. l. θεῶ), and boast in Christ Jesus...

4, 5. If any other thinketh

ROMANS.

i. 8—11. First I thank my God through Jesus Christ for you all...for God is my witness...how incessantly I make mention of you...at all times in my prayers making request...for I long to see you, that I may impart some spiritual grace (χάρισμα) to you.

ii. 18. Thou approvest the things that are excellent.

xiv. 9, 11. For hereunto Christ died and lived (i.e. rose again), that he may be Lord both of the dead and of the living...For it is written, I live, saith the Lord: for in me every knee shall bow and every tongue shall confess unto God (Is. xlv. 23, 24).

xii. 16—19. Having the same mind towards one another: not minding high things...Be not wise in your own conceits (φρόνιμοι παρ' ἑαυτοῖς)...having peace with all men: not avenging yourselves.

10. In honour holding one another in preference.

ii. 28. For the (circumcision) manifest in the flesh is not circumcision...but circumcision of the heart.

i. 9. God whom I serve (λατρεύω) in my spirit¹.

v. 11. Boasting in God through our Lord Jesus Christ.

xi. 1. For I also am an Is-

¹ The idea of the spiritual λατρεῖα appears again Rom. xii. 1, τὴν λογικὴν λατρείαν ὑμῶν, where this moral service of the Gospel is tacitly contrasted with the ritual service of the law, as the living sacrifice to the dead victim. Compare also James i. 27 θρησκεία καθαρά καὶ ἀμικτος κ.τ.λ. See the notes on Phil. iii. 3.

PHILIPPIANS.

to trust in the flesh, I more . . . of the race of Israel, the tribe of Benjamin.

(6) iii. 9. Not having my own righteousness which is of law, but that which is through faith of Christ, the righteousness of God in faith...

10, 11. Being made conformable (συμμορφιζόμενος) unto His death, if by any means I may attain unto the resurrection from the dead :

21. That it may become conformable (σύμμορφον) to the body of His glory.

(7) iii. 19. Whose end is destruction, whose God is their belly.

(8) iv. 18. Having received from Epaphroditus the (gifts) from you, an odour of a sweet savour, a sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God.

Some verbal coincidences besides might be pointed out, on which however no stress can be laid¹.

2. But if these resemblances suggest as early a date for raelite, of the seed of Abraham, Parallel the tribe of Benjamin. passages.

ROMANS.

x. 3. Ignorant of the righteousness of God, and seeking to establish their own (righteousness).

ix. 31, 32. Pursuing a law of righteousness...not of faith, but as of works.

vi. 5. For if we have been planted (σύμφυτοι γεγόναμεν) in the likeness of His death, then shall we be also of His resurrection. viii. 29. He foreordained them conformable (συμμόρφους) to the image of His Son.

vi. 21. For the end of those things is death.

xvi. 18. They serve not our Lord Christ but their own belly.

xii. 1. To present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, well-pleasing to God.

¹ I have observed the following words and expressions common to these two epistles and not occurring elsewhere in the New Testament; ἀποκαταδοκία, Rom. viii. 19, Phil. i. 20; ἄχρι τοῦ νῦν, Rom. viii. 22, Phil. i. 5; ἐξ ἐριθείας, Rom. ii. 8, Phil. i. 16; σύμμορφος, Rom. viii. 29, Phil. iii. 21; προσδέχεσθαι ἐν Κυρίῳ, Rom. xvi. 2, Phil. ii. 29; besides one or two which occur in the parallels quoted in the text. Compare also Rom. xiv. 14 οἶδα καὶ πέπεισμαι, with Phil. i. 25 τοῦτο πεποιθὼς οἶδα. The following are found in St Paul in these two epistles only, though occurring elsewhere in the New Testament; ἀκέραιος, Rom. xvi. 19, Phil. ii. 15 (comp. Matt. x. 16); ἐπιζητεῖν, Rom. xi. 7, Phil. iv. 17 (common elsewhere); λειτουργός, Rom. xiii. 6, xv. 16, Phil. ii. 25 (comp. Heb. i. 7, viii. 2); ὁκνηρός, Rom. xii. 11, Phil. iii. 1 (comp. Matt. xxv. 26); ὑπερέχειν, Rom. xiii. 1, Phil. ii. 3, iii. 8, iv. 7 (comp. 1 Pet. ii. 13); ὁμολῶμα, Rom. i. 23, v. 14, vi. 5, viii. 3, Phil. ii. 7 (comp. Rev. ix. 7); and perhaps μενούργε, Rom. ix. 20, x. 18, Phil. iii. 8 (comp. Luke xi. 28).

2. Reasons for placing the other epistles late. the Epistle to the Philippians as circumstances will allow, there are yet more cogent reasons for placing the others as late as possible. The letters to the Colossians and Ephesians—the latter more especially—exhibit an advanced stage in the development of the Church. The heresies, which the Apostle here combats, are no longer the crude, materialistic errors of the early childhood of Christianity, but the more subtle speculations of its maturer age. The doctrine which he preaches is not now the ‘milk for babes,’ but the ‘strong meat’ for grown men. He speaks to his converts no more ‘as unto carnal’ but ‘as unto spiritual.’ In the letter to the Ephesians especially his teaching soars to the loftiest height, as he dwells on the mystery of the Word and of the Church. Here too we find the earliest reference to a Christian hymn¹, showing that the devotion of the Church was at length finding expression in set forms of words. In both ways these epistles bridge over the gulf which separates the Pastoral letters from the Apostle’s earlier writings. The heresies of the Pastoral letters are the heresies of the Colossians and Ephesians grown rank and corrupt. The solitary quotation already mentioned is the precursor of the not infrequent references to Christian formularies in these latest of the Apostle’s writings. And in another respect also the sequence is continuous, if this view of the relative dates be accepted. The directions relating to ecclesiastical government, which are scattered through the Pastoral Epistles, are the outward correlative, the practical sequel to the sublime doctrine of the Church first set forth in its fulness in the Epistle to the Ephesians. A few writers have questioned the genuineness of the letters to the Colossians and Ephesians, many more of the Pastoral Epistles. They have done so chiefly on the ground that these writings present a later stage of Christian thought and organization, than the universally acknowledged letters of St Paul. External authority, supported by internal evidence of various kinds, bids us stop short of this conclusion. But, if

¹ Ephes. v. 14, διὸ λέγει
 “Εγείρε ὁ καθεύδων

Καὶ ἀνάστα ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν Καὶ ἐπιφάνῃσει σοὶ ὁ Χριστός.

we refuse to accept the inference, we can hardly fail to recognise the facts which suggested it. These facts are best met by placing the Epistles to the Colossians and Ephesians late in St Paul's first Roman captivity, so as to separate them as widely as possible from the earlier epistles, and by referring the Pastoral letters to a still later date towards the close of the Apostle's life.

III.

THE CHURCH OF PHILIPPI.

Natural advantages of Philippi.

PHILIPPI¹ was founded by the great Macedonian king, whose name it bears, on or near the site of the ancient Crenides, 'Wells' or 'Fountains'. Its natural advantages were considerable. In the neighbourhood were gold and silver mines which had been worked in very early times by the Phœnicians and afterwards by the Thasians². The plain moreover on which it was situated, washed by the Gangites a tributary of the Strymon, was and is remarkable for its fertility⁴.

But the circumstance, to which even more than to its rich soil and mineral treasures Philippi owed its importance, was its οἱ δὲ Φίλιπποι πόλις ἐστὶν ἡ Δάτος ὠνομάζετο πάλαι καὶ Κρηνίδες ἔτι πρὸ Δάτου, κρῆναι γὰρ εἰσι περὶ τῷ λόφῳ ναμάτων πολλαὶ κ.τ.λ. Appian however is wrong in identifying Crenides and Philippi with Datos or Daton, though his statement is copied by more than one recent writer. The site of this last-mentioned place was near to Neapolis: see Leake p. 223 sq., Perrot p. 46, Miss. Archéol. p. 60 sq.

¹ On the geography and antiquities of Philippi, see Cousinéry Voyage dans la Macédoine II p. 1 sq. (1831); Leake Northern Greece III p. 214 sq. (1835); and more recently two short papers by Perrot in the Revue Archéologique (1860) II. p. 44 sq., p. 67 sq., entitled Daton, Néopolis, les mines de Philippos. A work of great importance was commenced under the auspices of the late French Emperor, Mission Archéologique de Macédoine, by MM. Heuzey and Daumet; of which the part relating to Philippi and the neighbourhood has appeared (1869). Besides several unpublished inscriptions it contains what appears to be a very careful map of the site of the town and district.

² Diod. Sic. xvi. 3, 8; Strabo vii. p. 331; Appian Bell. Civ. iv. p. 105

³ On the mines of Philippi see Boeckh's Public Economy of Athens p. 8 (Engl. trans.), Miss. Archéol. p. 4, p. 55 sq.

⁴ Cousinéry II. p. 5, 'Les produits seraient immenses si l'activité et l'industrie des habitans répondaient à la libéralité de la nature'; see also Perrot p. 49: comp. Athen. xv. p. 682 B, Appian iv. p. 105.

geographical position, commanding the great high road between Europe and Asia. The almost continuous mountain barrier between the East and West is here depressed so as to form a gateway for this thoroughfare of the two continents¹. It was this advantage of position which led Philip to fortify the site of the ancient Crenides. It was this which marked out the place as the battle-field where the destinies of the Empire were decided. It was this, lastly, which led the conqueror to plant a Roman colony on the scene of his triumph.

Neither to its productive soil nor to its precious metals can we trace any features which give a distinctive character to the early history of the Gospel at Philippi. Its fertility it shared with many other scenes of the Apostle's labours. Its mineral wealth appears at this time to have been almost, if not wholly, drained. The mines had passed successively into the hands of the three prerogative powers of civilised Europe, the Athenians, the Macedonians, and the Romans. Even before Philip founded his city, the works had been discontinued on account of the scanty yield. By his order they were reopened, and a large revenue was extracted from them². But he seems to have taxed their productive power to the utmost; for during the Roman occupation we hear but little of them³.

Its geographical importance.

Its mines exhausted.

¹ Brutus and Cassius pitched their camp somewhere in the neighbourhood of the pass on two eminences which stand on either side of the road. Appian, iv. p. 106, describing their position says, Τὸ δὲ μέσον τῶν λόφων, τὰ ὀκτὼ στάδια, ὁδὸς ἦν ἐς τὴν Ἀσίαν τε καὶ Εὐρώπην, καθάπερ πύλαι: see Miss. Archéol. p. 105 sq. The pass itself is formed by a depression in the ridge of Symbolum, so called because it bridges together the higher mountains on either side, Pangæum to the west and the continuation of Hæmus to the east. The ridge of Symbolum thus separates the plain of the Gangites from the seaboard, and must be crossed in visiting Philippi from Neapolis: Dion Cass.

xlvi. 35 Σύμβολον τὸ χωρίον ὀνομάζουσι καθ' ὃ τὸ ὄρος ἐκείνο (i.e. Παγγαῖον) ἐτέρῳ τινὶ ἐς μεσόγειαν ἀνατείνοντι συμβάλλει, καὶ ἔστι μεταξύ Νέας πόλεως καὶ Φιλίππων· ἡ μὲν γὰρ πρὸς θαλάσσην καὶ ἀντιπέραν Θάσου ἦν, ἡ δὲ ἐντὸς τῶν ὀρῶν ἐπὶ τῷ πεδίῳ πετόλισται; see Leake p. 217. The distance from Neapolis to Philippi is given by Appian (iv. 106) as 70 stadia, by the Jerus. Itin. (p. 321, Wess.) as 10 miles (not 9, as stated by MM. Heuzey and Daumet), and by the Antonin. Itin. (p. 603, Wess.) as 12 miles. A recent measurement makes it from 12 to 13 kilomètres (Mission Archéologique p. 19), i.e. about 9 Roman miles.

² Diod. Sic. xvi. 8.

³ On the working of the Macedonian

Its mixed population.

On the other hand the position of Philippi as a thoroughfare for the traffic of nations invests St Paul's preaching here with a peculiar interest. To this circumstance may be ascribed the great variety of types among the first Philippian converts, which is one of the most striking and most instructive features in this portion of the narrative. We are standing at the confluence of the streams of European and Asiatic life: we see reflected in the evangelization of Philippi, as in a mirror, the history of the passage of Christianity from the East to the West.

St Paul's
first visit.

It was in the course of his second missionary journey, about the year 52, that St Paul first visited Philippi. His associates were Silas who had accompanied him from Jerusalem¹, Timotheus whom they had taken up at Lystra², and Luke who had recently joined the party at Troas³. At this last-mentioned place the Apostle's eyes were at length opened to the import of those mysterious checks and impulses which had brought him to a seaport lying opposite to the European coast. 'A man of Macedonia' appeared in a night vision, and revealed to him the work which the 'Spirit of Jesus'⁴ had designed for him. Forthwith he sets sail for Europe. His zeal is seconded by wind and wave, and the voyage is made with unwonted speed⁵. Landing at Neapolis he makes no halt there, but presses forward to fulfil his mission. A mountain range still lies between him and his work. Following the great Egnatian road he surmounts this barrier, and the plain of Philippi, the first city in Macedonia, lies mines generally under the Romans, see Becker and Marquardt Röm. Alterth. III. 2, p. 144. I have not found any mention of those of Philippi after the Christian era. The passages in ancient writers referring to mining operations are collected in J. and L. Sabatier Production de l'Or etc. (St Petersburg, 1850) p. 5 sq.

¹ Acts xv. 40.

² Acts xvi. 1, 3.

³ Compare Acts xvi. 8 κατέβησαν εἰς Τρωάδα, with xvi. 10 εὐθέως ἐξήτησάμεν ἐξελθεῖν εἰς τὴν Μακεδονίαν.

⁴ Acts xvi. 7 τὸ πνεῦμα Ἰησοῦ, the correct reading.

⁵ Acts xvi. 11 εὐθυδρομήσαμεν εἰς Σαμοθράκην, τῇ δὲ ἐπιούσῃ εἰς Νεάπολιν. On a later occasion the voyage from Neapolis to Troas takes five days, Acts xx. 5.

at his feet¹. Here he establishes himself and delivers his message.

Before considering the circumstances and results of this mission, it will be necessary to direct attention to two features in the actual condition of Philippi which appear on the face of St Luke's narrative and are not without their influence on the progress of the Gospel—its political status and its resident Jewish population.

1. Appreciating its strategical importance of which he had had recent experience, Augustus founded at Philippi a Roman military colony with the high-sounding name 'Colonia Augusta

Two features in St Luke's account.

1. Philippi a Roman colony.

¹ This is the probable explanation of the expression in Acts xvi. 12, ἡτις ἐστὶν πρώτη τῆς μερίδος, Μακεδονίας πόλις, κολλωνία, 'for this is the first place in the country (or district), a city of Macedonia, a colony.' The clause explains why the Apostle did not halt at Neapolis. Though the political frontier might not be constant, the natural boundary between Thrace and Macedonia was the mountain range already described: see p. 47, note 1. Thus, while Philippi is almost universally assigned to Macedonia, Neapolis is generally spoken of as a Thracian town, e.g. in Scylax (Geog. Min. i. p. 54, ed. Müller): see Rettig Quæst. Philipp. p. 10 sq. The reading of Acts xvi. 12, which I have given, seems the best supported, as well as the most expressive: the first τῆς (before μερίδος) ought probably to be retained, being omitted only by B, besides some copies which leave out μερίδος also; the second (before Μακεδονίας) to be rejected, as it is wanting in a majority of the best copies: but these variations do not affect the general sense of the passage. For the expression compare Polyb. ii. 16. 2. μέχρι πόλεως Πίσης, ἡ πρώτη κείται τῆς Τυρρηνίας ὡς πρὸς τὰς δυσμὰς, and v. 80. 3 ἡ κείται μετὰ Ῥινोकόλουρα, πρώτη τῶν κατὰ κόλην Συρίαν πόλεων, κ.τ.λ., quoted by Rettig pp. 7, 8. For μερίς compare μεριδάρχης, Joseph. Ant. xii. 5. 5.

Thus πρώτη describes the geographical position of Philippi. All attempts to explain the epithet of its political rank have failed. In no sense was it a 'chief town.' So far as we know, Thessalonica was all along the general capital of Macedonia; and if this particular district had still a separate political existence, the centre of government was not Philippi but Amphipolis. Nor again can it be shown that πρώτη was ever assumed as a mere honorary title by any city in Greece or Macedonia, though common in Asia Minor. On this latter point Marquardt, in Becker Röm. Alterth. iii. i. p. 118, seems to be in error when he states that Thessalonica was styled πρώτη Μακεδόνων: he has misinterpreted the inscription mentioned in Boeckh no. 1967; see Leake iii. pp. 214, 483, 486. The correction πρώτης μερίδος for πρώτη τῆς μερίδος might deserve some consideration, though unsupported by any external evidence, if it were at all probable that the original division of Macedonia by the Romans into four provinces was still recognised; but it seems to have been abandoned long before this date; see Leake iii. p. 487.

Julia Philippensis¹. At the same time he conferred upon it the special privilege of the 'jus Italicum²'. A colony is described by an ancient writer as a miniature likeness of the great Roman people³; and this character is fully borne out by the account of Philippi in the apostolic narrative. The political atmosphere of the place is wholly Roman. The chief magistrates, more strictly designated duumvirs, arrogate to themselves the loftier title of prætors⁴. Their servants, like the attendant officers of the highest functionaries in Rome, bear the name of lictors⁵. The pride and privilege of Roman citizenship confront us at every turn. This is the sentiment

¹ Plin. N. H. iv. 18 'Intus Philippi colonia.' See the coins in Eckhel ii. p. 76, Mionnet i. p. 486; Orell. Inscr. 512. In one instance at least 'Victrix' seems to be added to this title, Mission Archéologique p. 17. According to Dion Cass. li. 4, Augustus ridded himself of troublesome neighbours by transplanting to Philippi and other colonies the inhabitants of those Italian towns which had espoused the cause of Antonius.

² Dig. l. 15. On the 'jus Italicum' see Becker and Marquardt Röm. Alterth. iii. i. p. 261 sq.

³ Gell. xvi. 13 'Populi Romani, ejus istæ coloniæ quasi effigies parvæ simulacraque esse quædam videntur.'

⁴ Acts xvi. 19, 22, 35, 36, 38. The same persons who are first designated generally 'the magistrates' (ἀρχοντες, ver. 19) are afterwards called by their distinctive title 'the prætors' (στρατηγῶν). It is a mistake to suppose that the prisoners were handed over by the civil authorities (ἀρχοντες) to the military (στρατηγῶν) to be tried. The chief magistrates of a colony were styled 'duumviri juri dicundo,' or 'duumviri' simply. On their functions see Savigny Gesch. d. R. R. i. p. 30 sq., with other references in Becker and Marquardt Röm. Alterth. iii. i. p. 352. A duumvir of Philippi appears on an inscription, Orell. no. 3746 C. VIBIVS C. F. VOL. FLORVS DEC IIIVIR ET MVNERARIVS PHILIPPIS FIL. CAR. C.; another on a monument at Neapolis, Mission Archéologique p. 15 [DECV] RIONATVS . ET . IIIVIRALICIS . PONTIFEX . FLAMEN . DIVI CLAVDI . PHILIPPIS. See also a mutilated inscription, ib. p. 127 II[VIR. J[V]R. DIC. PHILIPPIS. The second must have been contemporary with St Paul. On the practice of assuming the title of 'prætor' see Cicero de Leg. Agr. ii. 34 'Vidi, quum venissem Capuam, coloniam deductam L. Considio et Sext. Saltio (quemadmodum ipsi loquebantur) prætoribus: ut intelligatis quantam locus ipse afferat superbiam... Nam primum, id quod dixi, quum ceteris in coloniis duumviri appellentur, hi se prætores appellari voluerunt.' This assumption however was by no means exceptional even in Italy (see Orell. Inscr. 3785, Hor. Sat. i. 5. 34, and notes); and where some Greek title was necessary, as at Philippi, στρατηγῶν would naturally be adopted. See Cureton's Anc. Syr. Doc. p. 188. Another inscription (Orell. no. 4064) mentions a MAG. QVINQVENN. (quinquennalis), i.e. a censor, at Philippi.

⁵ ῥαβδούχοι, Acts xvi. 35, 38.

which stimulates the blind loyalty of the people¹: this is the power which obtains redress for the prisoners and forces an apology from the unwilling magistrates². Nor is this feature entirely lost sight of, when we turn from St Luke's narrative to St Paul's epistle. Addressing a Roman colony from the Roman metropolis, writing as a citizen to citizens, he recurs to the political franchise as an apt symbol of the higher privileges of their heavenly calling, to the political life as a suggestive metaphor for the duties of their Christian profession³.

2. On this, as on all other occasions, the Gospel is first offered to the Jews. Their numbers at Philippi appear to have been very scanty. St Paul found no synagogue here, as at Thessalonica and Berea. The members of the chosen race met together for worship every week at a 'place of prayer' outside the city gate on the banks of the Gangites⁴. The Apostle appears to have had no precise information of the spot⁵, but the common practice of his countrymen would suggest the suburbs of the city, and the river-side especially, as a likely place for these religious gatherings⁶. Thither accordingly he repaired with his companions on the first sabbath day after their arrival. To the women assembled he delivered his mes-

² The Jews of Philippi.

¹ Acts xvi. 21 'And teach customs which it is not lawful for us to receive neither to observe, being Romans.'

² Acts xvi. 37—39.

³ Phil. i. 27 μόνον ἀξίως τοῦ εὐαγγελίου τοῦ Χριστοῦ πολιτεύεσθε, iii. 20 ἡμῶν γὰρ τὸ πολιτεύμα ἐν οὐρανοῖς ὑπάρχει.

⁴ Acts xvi. 13 παρὰ ποταμὸν. This river was the Gangas or Gangites (Ap-pian iv. p. 106 δὲν Γάγγαν τινές, οἱ δὲ Γαγγίτην λέγουσι) whose sources are near to Philippi and probably gave its name to Crenides. As this river is called by Herodotus, vii. 113, Ἀγγίτης, and now bears the name Anghista, it would appear that the initial consonant was not a decided G, but a guttural sound like the Shemitic Ayin which is sometimes omitted in Greek and sometimes represented by Γ. It is a great error to identify the stream mentioned by St Luke with the Strymon, which must be about 30 miles distant, and certainly would not be designated a river without the definite article.

⁵ The correct reading seems to be, not οὐ ἐνομίζετο προσευχὴ εἶναι, but οὐ ἐνομίζομεν προσευχὴν εἶναι, 'where we supposed there was a place of prayer'; and may be explained in the way suggested in the text.

⁶ Joseph. Ant. xiv. 10. 13 τὰς προσευχὰς ποιεῖσθαι πρὸς τῇ θαλάσῃ κατὰ τὸ πάτριον ἔθος. So Tertullian speaks of the 'orationes littorales' of the Jews, adv. Nat. i. 13; comp. de Jejun. 16: see also Philo in Flacc. § 14, p. 535 M, and other references in Biscoe History of the Acts etc. p. 182 sq. (1840).

sage. Of strictly Hebrew converts the sacred record is silent; but the baptism of a proselytess and her household is related as the first triumph of the Gospel at Philippi.

No Judaic tendencies in the Philippian
Church.

To the scanty numbers and feeble influence of the Jews we may perhaps in some degree ascribe the unswerving allegiance of this church to the person of the Apostle and to the true principles of the Gospel. In one passage indeed his grateful acknowledgment of the love and faith of his Philippian converts is suddenly interrupted by a stern denunciation of Judaism¹. But we may well believe that in this warning he was thinking of Rome more than of Philippi; and that his indignation was aroused rather by the vexatious antagonism which there thwarted him in his daily work, than by any actual errors already undermining the faith of his distant converts². Yet even the Philippians were not safe from the intrusion of these dangerous teachers. At no great distance lay important Jewish settlements, the strongholds of this fanatical opposition. Even now there might be threatenings of an interference which would tamper with the allegiance and disturb the peace of his beloved church.

Character of St Luke's
narrative.

The Apostle's first visit to Philippi is recorded with a minuteness which has not many parallels in St Luke's history. The narrator had joined St Paul shortly before he crossed over into Europe: he was with the Apostle during his sojourn at Philippi: he seems to have remained there for some time after his departure³. This exact personal knowledge of the writer, combining with the grandeur and variety of the incidents themselves, places the visit to Philippi among the most striking and instructive passages in the apostolic narrative.

Three different types in the Philippian
converts.

I have already referred to the varieties of type among the first disciples at Philippi, as a prominent feature in this portion of the history. The three converts, who are especially mentioned, stand in marked contrast each to the other in national

¹ Phil. iii. 2 sq.

² See below, p. 68 sq.

³ The first person plural is dropped at Philippi (Acts xvii. 1, ἡλθον) and resumed at the same place (Acts xx. 5, ἔμενον ἡμᾶς) after a lapse of six or seven years. This coincidence suggests the inference in the text.

descent, in social rank, in religious education. They are representatives of three different races: the one an Asiatic, the other a Greek, the third a Roman. In the relations of everyday life they have nothing in common: the first is engaged in an important and lucrative branch of traffic: the second, treated by the law as a mere chattel without any social or political rights, is employed by her masters to trade upon the credulous superstition of the ignorant: the third, equally removed from both the one and the other, holds a subordinate office under government. In their religious training also they stand no less apart. In the one the speculative mystic temper of Oriental devotion has at length found deeper satisfaction in the revealed truths of the Old Testament. The second, bearing the name of the Pythian god the reputed source of Greek inspiration, represents an artistic and imaginative religion, though manifested here in a very low and degrading form¹. While the third, if he preserved the characteristic features of his race, must have exhibited a type of worship essentially political in tone. The purple-dealer and proselytess of Thyatira—the native slave-girl with the divining spirit—the Roman gaoler—all alike acknowledge the supremacy of the new faith. In the history of the Gospel at Philippi, as in the history of the Church at large, is reflected the great maxim of Christianity, the central truth of the Apostle's preaching, that here 'is neither Jew nor Greek, neither bond nor free, neither male nor female, but all are one in Christ Jesus'².

Again the order of these conversions is significant: first, the proselyte, next the Greek, lastly the Roman. Thus the incidents at Philippi in their sequence, not less than in their variety, symbolize the progress of Christianity throughout the world. Through the Israelite dispersion, through the proselytes whether of the covenant or of the gate, the message of the

Order of the conversions
typical.

¹ See Plut. Mor. p. 414 E, Clem. Hom. ix. 16. It has been conjectured that this girl with the 'Pytho-spirit' was a τερόδουλος attached to the famous oracle of Dionysus among the Satræ, a wild mountain tribe in the Hæmus chain: Herod. vii. 111. At all events the incident is illustrated by the religious temper of these half-barbarous mountaineers.

² Gal. iii. 28.

Gospel first reached the Greek. By the instrumentality of the Greek language and the diffusion of the Greek race it finally established itself in Rome, the citadel of power and civilisation, whence directly or indirectly it was destined to spread over the whole world.

These events however are only symbolical as all history—more especially scriptural history—is symbolical. The order of the conversions at Philippi was in itself the natural order. The sacred historian wrote down with truthful simplicity what he ‘saw and heard.’ The representative character of these several incidents can hardly have occurred to him. But from its geographical position Philippi, as a meeting-point of nations, would represent not unfairly the civilised world in miniature; and the phenomena of the progress of the Gospel in its wider sphere were thus anticipated on a smaller scale.

Social influence of the Gospel symbolized in the case of

But while the conversions at Philippi had thus a typical character, as representing not only the universality of the Gospel but also the order of its diffusion, they seem to illustrate still more distinctly the two great social revolutions which it has effected. In most modern treatises on civilisation, from whatever point of view they are written, a prominent place is given to the amelioration of woman and the abolition of slavery, as the noblest social triumphs of Christianity. Now the woman and the slave are the principal figures in the scene of the Apostle’s preaching at Philippi.

(1) The woman.

As regards the woman indeed it seems probable that the Apostle’s work was made easier by the national feelings and usages of Macedonia. It may, I think, be gathered from St Luke’s narrative, that her social position was higher in this country than in most parts of the civilised world. At Philippi, at Thessalonica, at Berea, the women—in some cases certainly, in all probably, ladies of birth and rank—take an active part with the Apostle¹. It forms moreover a striking coincidence,

¹ At Philippi, xvi. 13 ‘We spoke to the women that were gathered together’; at Thessalonica, xvii. 4 ‘There were added to Paul and Silas...of the chief women not a few’; at Berea, xvii. 12 ‘Many of them believed, and of the Greek women of rank (εὐσεχῆς γυναικῶν) and men not a few.’

and surely an undesigned coincidence, between the history and the epistle, that while in the former the Gospel is related to have been first preached to women and the earliest converts specially mentioned are women, in the latter we find the peace of the Philippian Church endangered by the feuds of two ladies of influence, whose zealous aid in the spread of the Gospel the Apostle gratefully acknowledges¹. Moreover the inference thus suggested by the narrative of St Luke and strengthened by the notice in St Paul's epistle is farther borne out, if I mistake not, by reference to other sources of information. The extant Macedonian inscriptions seem to assign to the sex a higher social influence than is common among the civilised nations of antiquity. In not a few instances a metronymic takes the place of the usual patronymic²; and in other cases a prominence is given to women which can hardly be accidental³. But whether I am right or not in the conjecture that the work of the Gospel was in this respect of the sex in Macedonia.

Influence

¹ Euodia and Syntyche, Phil. iv. 2, αἵτινες ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ συνήθλησάν μοι.

² On the well-known inscription giving the names of the Thessalonian politarchs, Boeckh no. 1967, we read Σωσιπάτρου τοῦ Κλεοπάτρας and Ταύρου τοῦ Ἀμμίας; on a second at Berea, 1957 f (add.) Πόρος Ἀμμίας; on a third not far from Berea, 1957 g (add.) Μακέδων Εὐγείας; on a fourth near Thessalonica, 1967 b (add.) [ὁ δεῖνα] Ἀντιφίλης; on a fifth at Edessa, 1997 c (add.) Ἀλέξανδρος καὶ Εἰούλιος οἱ Μαρκίας, Ἐσπερο[s] Σεμέλης, [Εἰ]ούλ[ιο]ς Καλίστης. See Leake iii. pp. 236, 277, 292.

³ For instance one inscription (no. 1958) records how a wife erects a tomb 'for herself and her dear husband out of their common earnings (ἐκ τῶν κοινῶν καμάτων)': another (no. 1977) how a husband erects a tomb 'for his devoted and darling wife (τῇ φιλόδορφ καὶ γλυκύτατῃ συνβίῳ) and himself,' in this case

also from their common savings (ἐκ τῶν κοινῶν κόπων). Again there are cases of monuments erected in honour of women by public bodies: e.g. no. 1997 d (add.) ἡ πόλις [κ]αὶ οἱ συνεπρα[γ]-ματε[ν]όμενοι [εἰ] Ῥωμαῖοι [εἰ] Πετρωνίαν Λ. Πετρωνίου Βάσσο[ν] θυγατέρα Στρατύλλαν τιμῶντ[ε]ς [Θε]οῖς, no. 1999 Μακεδόνων οἱ σύνεδροι Μαρκίαν Ἀκυλίαν Φαβρικιανοῦ Ἀπερος θυγατέρ[α] ἀνδρὸς ἀγαθοῦ: no. 1999 b (add.) τὸ κοινὸν τῶν Μακεδόνων Μανλίαν Ποντεῖαν Λουκούλλαν Αὔλου Ποντίου Βήρου τοῦ λαμπροτάτου ἀνθυπάτου γυναῖκα ἀρετῆς ἕνεκεν. Again the deferential language used by the husband speaking of the wife is worthy of notice, e.g. no. 1965 Εὐτύχης Στρατονίκη τῇ συμβίῳ καὶ κυρίᾳ μείας χάριν. These are the most striking but not the only instances in which an unusual prominence is given to women. The whole series of Macedonian inscriptions read continuously cannot fail, I think, to suggest the inference in the text.

aided by the social condition of Macedonia, the active zeal of the women in this country is a remarkable fact, without a parallel in the Apostle's history elsewhere and only to be compared with their prominence at an earlier date in the personal ministry of our Lord.

{2) The
slave.

And as Christianity exerts its influence on the woman at Philippi, so does it also on the slave. The same person, whose conversion exemplifies the one maxim of the Gospel that in Christ is 'neither male nor female,' is made a living witness of the other social principle also that in Him is 'neither bond nor free.' It can hardly have happened that the Apostle's mission had never before crossed the path of the slave; yet it is a significant fact, illustrating the varied character and typical import of this chapter of sacred history, that the divining girl at Philippi is the earliest recorded instance, where his attention is directed to one of these 'live chattels'.

Family religion exemplified.

But more than this: as the Gospel recognises the claims of the woman and the slave severally, so also it fulfils its noblest mission in hallowing the general relations of family life, which combines these and other elements. Here too the conversion of the Philippian Church retains its typical character. It has been observed², that this is the first recorded instance in St Paul's history where whole families are gathered into the fold. Lydia and her household—the gaoler and all belonging to him—are baptized into Christ. Henceforth the worship of households plays an important part in the divine economy of the Church. As in primeval days the patriarch was the recognised priest of his clan, so in the Christian Church the father of the house is the divinely appointed centre of religious life to his own family. The family religion is the true starting-point, the surest foundation, of the religion of cities and dioceses, of nations and empires. The church in the house of Philemon grows into the Church of Colossæ³; the church in the house of ἐμψυχον.

¹ Aristot. Pol. i. 4 ὁ δοῦλος κτῆμά τι p. 348 (2nd edition).

³ Philem. 2.

² See Conybeare and Howson I.

Nymphas becomes the Church of Laodicea¹; the church in the house of Aquila and Priscilla loses itself in the Churches of Ephesus and Rome².

Altogether the history of St Paul's connexion with Philippi assumes a prominence quite out of proportion to the importance of the place itself. In the incidents and the results alike of his preaching the grandeur of the epoch is brought out. The persecutions which the Apostle here endured were more than usually severe, and impressed themselves deeply on his memory, for he alludes to them once and again³. The marvellous deliverance wrought for him is without a parallel in his history before or after. The signal success which crowned his labours surpasses all his earlier or later achievements.

On this last-mentioned feature it is especially refreshing to dwell. The unwavering loyalty of his Philippian converts is the constant solace of the Apostle in his manifold trials, the one bright ray of happiness piercing the dark clouds which gather ever thicker about the evening of his life. They are his 'joy and crown, his brethren beloved and eagerly desired⁴.' From them alone he consents to receive alms for the relief of his personal wants⁵. To them alone he writes in language unclouded by any shadow of displeasure or disappointment.

St Paul's first visit to Philippi closed abruptly amid the storm of persecution. It was not to be expected that, where the life of the master had been so seriously endangered, the scholars would escape all penalties. The Apostle left behind him a legacy of suffering to this newly born church. This is not a mere conjecture: the afflictions of the Macedonian Christians, and of the Philippians especially, are more than once mentioned in St Paul's epistles⁶. If it was their privilege to believe in Christ,

Grandeur of the incidents.

Loyalty of the Philippians.

Their sufferings.

¹ Col. iv. 15.

² 1 Cor. xvi. 19, Rom. xvi. 5.

³ 1 Thess. ii. 2 'Though we had already suffered and been ignominiously treated (προπαθήντες και ὑβρισθέντες), as ye know, at Philippi,' Phil. i. 30 'Having the same conflict which ye saw in me.'

⁴ Phil. iv. 1.

⁵ Phil. iv. 15.

⁶ 2 Cor. viii. 2. See the notes on Phil. i. 7, 28—30.

it was equally their privilege to suffer for Him¹. To this refiner's fire may doubtless be ascribed in part the lustre and purity of their faith compared with other churches.

Later communications with Philippi.

About five years elapsed between St Paul's first and second visit to Philippi: but meanwhile his communications with this church appear to have been frequent and intimate. It has been already mentioned that on the Apostle's departure St Luke seems to have remained at Philippi, where he was taken up after the lapse of several years and where perhaps he had spent some portion of the intervening period². Again when in the year 57 St Paul, then residing at Ephesus, despatched Timotheus and Erastus to Macedonia³, we may feel sure that the most loyal of all his converts were not overlooked in this general mission. When moreover about the same time, either through these or other messengers, he appealed to the Macedonian Christians to relieve the wants of their poorer brethren in Judæa, it may safely be assumed that his faithful Philippian Church was foremost in the promptness and cordiality of its response, where all alike in spite of abject poverty and sore persecution were lavish with their alms 'to their power, yea and beyond their power⁴'. Nor is it probable that these notices exhaust all his communications with Philippi at this time. Lying on the high-road between Asia and Achaia, this city would be the natural halting-place for the Apostle's messengers⁵, as they passed to and fro between the great centres of Gentile Christendom.

At length in the autumn of the year 57 the Apostle himself, released from his engagements in Asia, revisits his European churches. His first intention had been to sail direct to Achaia, in which case he would have called in Macedonia and returned

¹ Phil. i. 29 ὑμῶν ἐχαρίσθη τὸ ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ, οὐ μόνον τὸ εἰς αὐτὸν πιστεῦν ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ ὑπὲρ αὐτοῦ πάσχειν.

² See above, p. 52, note 3.

³ Acts xix. 22. Of Timotheus see also 1 Cor. iv. 17, xvi. 10, 2 Cor. i. 1. Putting together these notices we may infer that Timotheus did not proceed with Erastus to Corinth, but remained behind in Macedonia.

⁴ 2 Cor. viii. 1—5.

⁵ Titus and his companion for instance (2 Cor. ii. 13, vii. 6, xii. 18; comp. 1 Cor. xvi. 11, 12).

to Corinth. But afterwards he altered his plan and travelled by land, so as to take Macedonia on the way¹. Leaving Macedonia and visiting Corinth, he had purposed to take ship from this latter place direct to Palestine: but receiving information of a plot against his life, he changes his route and returns by land². Thus owing to a combination of circumstances Macedonia receives a double visit. On both occasions his affectionate relations with Philippi seem to attract and rivet him there. On the former, seeking relief from the agony of suspense which oppresses him at Troas, he hurries across the sea to Macedonia, halting apparently at Philippi and there awaiting the arrival of Titus³. On the latter, unable to tear himself away, he despatches his companions to Asia in advance and lingers behind at Philippi himself, that he may keep the paschal feast with his beloved converts⁴. It is the last festival for some years to come, which he is free to celebrate as and where he wills.

Of the former visit St Luke records only the fact. But the Second Epistle to the Corinthians certainly⁵, the Epistle to the Galatians not improbably⁶, were written from Macedonia on this occasion: and, though scarcely a single incident is directly related, they present a complete and vivid picture of the Apostle's inward life at this time. Of his external relations thus much may be learnt: we find him busy with the collection of alms for Judæa, stimulating the Macedonian churches and gratefully acknowledging their liberal response⁷; we gather also from the mention of 'fightings without⁸,' that the enemies whether Jewish or heathen, who had persecuted him in earlier years, ¹ 2 Cor. i. 15—17, comp. 1 Cor. xvi. 5, 6.

² Acts xix. 21, xx. 1—3.

³ 2 Cor. ii. 12 sq., vii. 5, 6.

⁴ Acts xx. 5, 6 'These going before waited for us at Troas: but we set sail from Philippi after the days of unleavened bread.'

⁵ 2 Cor. ii. 13, vii. 5, viii. 1 sq., ix. 2, 4. The subscription mentions Philippi as the place of writing, and this is probable, though the authority is almost worthless.

⁶ See Galatians, p. 35 sq.

⁷ 2 Cor. viii. 1—6, ix. 2.

⁸ 2 Cor. vii. 5; comp. viii. 2. To this occasion also the Apostle may possibly refer in Phil. i. 30, τὸν αὐτὸν ἀγῶνα ἔχοντες ὅταν εἰδὲτε ἐν ἡμῶι.

made his reappearance in Macedonia a signal for the renewal of their attacks. Of the latter visit we know absolutely nothing, except the names of his companions and the fact already mentioned that he remained behind for the passover.

The Philippians send alms
to St Paul.

From this time forward we read no more of the Philippians till the period of St Paul's Roman captivity. When they heard of his destination, their slumbering affection for him revived. It was not the first time that they had been eager to offer and he willing to receive alms for the supply of his personal wants. After the close of his first visit, while he was still in Macedonia, they had more than once sent him timely assistance to Thessalonica¹. When from Macedonia he passed on to Achaia, fresh supplies from Philippi reached him at Corinth². Then there was a lull in their attentions. It was not that their affection had cooled, the Apostle believed, but that the opportunity was wanting. Now at length after a lapse of ten years their loyalty again took the same direction; and Epaphroditus was despatched to Rome with their gift³.

Illness of Epaphro-
ditus.

Their zealous attention was worthily seconded by the messenger whom they had chosen. Not content with placing this token of their love in St Paul's hands, Epaphroditus⁴ devoted himself heart and soul to the ministry under the Apostle's guidance. But the strain of excessive exertion was too great for his physical powers. In his intense devotion to the work he lost his health and almost his life. At length the danger passed away: 'God had mercy,' says the Apostle, 'not on him only,

¹ Phil. iv. 16.

² Phil. iv. 15 'When I left Macedonia, no church communicated with me in regard of giving and receiving but ye only'; 2 Cor. xi. 8, 9 'When I was present with you and wanted, I was not burdensome to any: for my want the brethren having come from Macedonia supplied.'

³ Phil. ii. 25, 30, iv. 10—18.

⁴ Epaphroditus is known to us only from the notices in this epistle. He is doubtless to be distinguished from

Epaphras (Col. i. 7, iv. 12, Philem. 23); for, though the names are the same, the identity of the persons seems improbable for two reasons. (1) The one appears to have been a native of Philippi (Phil. ii. 25 sq.), the other of Colossæ (Col. iv. 12). (2) The longer form of the name is always used of the Philippian delegate, the shorter of the Colossian teacher. The name in fact is so extremely common in both forms, that the coincidence affords no presumption of the identity of persons.

but on myself also, that I might not have sorrow upon sorrow.' But his convalescence was succeeded by home-sickness. He was oppressed with the thought that the Philippians would have heard of his critical state. He was anxious to return that he might quiet their alarm¹.

This purpose was warmly approved by St Paul. To contribute to their happiness in any way was to alleviate his own sorrows². He would not therefore withhold Epaphroditus from them. So Epaphroditus returns to Philippi, bearing a letter from the Apostle, in which he pours out his heart in an overflow of gratitude and love.

In this letter he expresses his intention of sending Timothy to them immediately³. Whether this purpose was ever fulfilled we have no means of knowing. But in sending Timothy he did not mean to withhold himself. He hoped before long to be released, and he would then visit them in person⁴. The delay indeed seems to have been greater than he then anticipated; but at length he was able to fulfil his promise. One visit at least, probably more than one, he paid to Philippi and his other Macedonian churches in the interval between his first and second captivities⁵.

The canonical writings record nothing more of Philippi. A whole generation passes away before its name is again mentioned. Early in the second century Ignatius, now on his way to Rome where he is condemned to suffer martyrdom, as he passes through Philippi is kindly entertained and escorted on

The name Epaphroditus or Epaphras is not specially characteristic of Macedonia, but occurs abundantly everywhere. On a Thessalonian inscription (Boeckh no. 1987) we meet with one Γάιος Κλώδιος Ἐπαφρόδειτος. This concurrence of names is suggestive. The combination, which occurs once, might well occur again: and it is possible (though in the absence of evidence hardly probable) that Gaius the Macedonian of St Luke (Acts xix. 29) is the same person as Epaphroditus the Philippian of St Paul.

¹ Phil. ii. 25—30.

² Phil. ii. 28 'That having seen him ye may rejoice again, and I may be less sorrowful.'

³ Phil. ii. 19.

⁴ Phil. ii. 24.

⁵ 1 Tim. i. 3. The notices in 2 Tim. iv. 13, 20 perhaps refer to a later date. If so, they point to a second visit of the Apostle after his release; for in going from Troas to Corinth he would naturally pass through Macedonia.

The Epistle to the Philippians, A.D. 61 or 62?

Mission of Timothy.

Later visits of St Paul.

A Ignatius at Philippi.

his way by the members of the church¹. This circumstance seems to have given rise to communications with Polycarp, the youthful bishop of Smyrna and trusty friend of Ignatius, in which the Philippian invite him to address to them some words of advice and exhortation. Polycarp responds to this appeal. He congratulates them on their devotion to the martyrs 'bound in saintly fetters, the diadems of the truly elect.' He rejoices that 'the sturdy root of their faith, famous from the earliest days², still survives and bears fruit unto our Lord Jesus Christ.' He should not have ventured to address them, unless they had themselves solicited him. He, and such as he, cannot 'attain unto the wisdom of the blessed and glorious Paul,' who taught among them in person, and wrote to them when absent instructions which they would do well to study for their edification in the faith³. He offers many words of exhortation, more especially relating to the qualifications of widows, deacons, and presbyters⁴. He warns them against those who deny that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh, against those who reject the testimony of the cross, against those who say there is no resurrection or judgment⁵. He sets before them for imitation the example 'not only of the blessed Ignatius and Zosimus and Rufus, but also of others of their own church, and Paul himself and the other Apostles,' who have gone before to their rest⁶.

There is however one cause for sorrow. Valens a presbyter

¹ Martyr. Ignat. § 5; Polyc. Phil. 1 δεξαμένους τὰ μμήματα τῆς ἀληθοῦς ἀγάπης καὶ προπέψασιν ὡς ἐπέβαλεν ὑμῖν, τοὺς ἐνείλημμένους [ἐνείλημμένους?] τοῖς ἀγιοπρεπέσι δεσμοῖς ἀτινά ἐστι διαδήματα κ.τ.λ. The martyrs here alluded to are doubtless Ignatius and others mentioned by name § 9. The letter of Polycarp was written after the death of Ignatius (§ 9); but the event was so recent that he asks the Philippians to send him information about Ignatius and his companions, § 13 'Et de ipso Ignatio et de his qui cum eo sunt (the present is doubtless due to the translator, where the original was probably τῶν σὺν αὐτῷ) quod certius agnoveritis, significate.'

² § 1 ἐξ ἀρχαίων καταγγελλομένη χρόνων.

³ § 3. On this passage see the detached note on iii. 1.

⁴ § 4—6.

⁵ § 7. It would not be a safe inference, that when Polycarp wrote the Philippian Church was in any special danger of these errors. The language is general and comprehensive, warning them against all the prevailing forms of heresy.

⁶ § 9.

in the Philippian Church, and his wife whose name is not given, had brought scandal on the Gospel by their avarice¹. From all participation in their crime Polycarp exonerates the great body of the church. He has neither known nor heard of any such vice in those Philippians among whom St Paul laboured, boasting of them in all the churches, at a time when his own Smyrna was not yet converted to Christ². He trusts the offend-

The crime
of Valens.

¹ § 11. Polycarp after speaking of the crime of Valens adds, 'Moneo itaque vos ut abstinere ab avaritia et sitis casti et veraces... Si quis non abstinerit se ab avaritia, ab idololatria coinquinabitur.' The crime of Valens and his wife was doubtless avarice, not concupiscence, as the passage is frequently interpreted. In §§ 4, 6, 'avaritia' is the translation of φιλαργυρία; and this was probably the word used in the original here. But even if the Greek had πλεονεξία, it is a mistake to suppose that this word ever signifies 'unchastity' (see the note on 1 Thess. iv. 6); and the fact that both husband and wife were guilty of the crime in question points rather to avarice (as in the case of Ananias and Sapphira) than to impurity. The word 'casti' seems to have misled the commentators; but even if the original were ἀγνοί and not καθαροί, it might still apply to sordid and dishonest gain. This use of ἀγνός would not be unnatural even in a heathen writer (e.g. Pind. Ol. iii. 21 ἀγνὰ κρῖσις); and the Apostle's denunciation of covetousness as idolatry (to which Polycarp refers in the context) makes it doubly appropriate here. 'Corruption' is a common synonyme for fraud. On the other hand 'veraces' is quite out of place, if concupiscence was intended.

The correct interpretation may be inferred also from other expressions in the letter. Polycarp seems to have had the crime of Valens in his thoughts when in an earlier passage, § 4, he declares that 'avarice is the beginning of all troubles (ἀρχὴ πάντων χαλεπῶν φιλαργυρίας), and when again in enumerating the qualifications of presbyters (§ 6) he states that they must stand aloof from every form of avarice (μακρὰν ὄντες πάσης φιλαργυρίας). The Macedonian churches in St Paul's time were as liberal as they were poor (2 Cor. viii. 1—3). Greed of wealth was about the last crime that they could be charged with. There is no reason to suppose that their character had wholly changed within a single generation. But a notable exception had occurred at Philippi; and, though Polycarp distinctly treats it as an exception and acquits the Philippian church as a body (§ 11), yet it naturally leads him to dwell on the heinousness of this sin.

The name 'Valens' for some reason seems to have been frequent in Macedonia; perhaps because it had been borne by some local celebrity: see for instance Boeckh no. 1969 (at Thessalonica), where it occurs together with another common Macedonian name (Acts xx. 4), Οὐαλῆς καὶ Σεκοῦνδος. It is found also in another inscription at Drama (Drabescus?) in Perrot (Revue Archéol. 1860, ii. p. 73); and in a third and a fourth at Philippi itself, published in Cousinéry ii. p. 21, Miss. Archéol. p. 121.

² § 11 'In quibus laboravit beatus Paulus, qui estis in principio epistolæ ejus: de vobis etenim gloriatur in omnibus ecclesiis quæ Deum solæ tunc cognoverant, nos autem nondum novimus.'

ers will be truly penitent: and he counsels the Philippians to treat them, not as enemies, but as erring members. They are well versed in the scriptures¹, and will not need to be reminded how the duty of gentleness and forbearance is enforced therein.

Conclusion.

At the conclusion, he refers to certain parting injunctions of Ignatius: he complies with their desire and sends copies of those letters of the martyr which are in his possession: he commends to their care Crescens, the bearer of the epistle, who will be accompanied by his sister.

Later history of Philippi.

With this notice the Philippian Church may be said to pass out of sight. From the time of Polycarp its name is very rarely mentioned; and scarcely a single fact is recorded which throws any light on its internal condition². Here and there the name of a bishop appears in connexion with the records of an ecclesiastical council. On one occasion its prelate subscribes a decree as vicegerent of the metropolitan of Thessalonica³. But, though the see is said to exist even to the present day⁴, the city itself has been long a wilderness. Of its destruction or decay no record is left; and among its ruins travellers have hitherto failed to find any Christian remains⁵. Of the church which stood foremost among all the apostolic communities in faith and love, it may literally be said that not one stone stands upon another. Its whole career is a signal monument of the inscrutable counsels of God. Born into the world with the brightest promise, the Church of Philippi has lived without a history and perished without a memorial.

¹ § 12 'Confido enim vos bene exercitatos esse in sacris literis et nihil vos latet etc.'

² The rhetoric of Tertullian (de Præscr. 36, adv. Marc. iv. 5), who appeals among others to the Philippian Church as still maintaining the Apostle's doctrine and reading his epistle publicly, can hardly be considered evidence, though the fact itself need not be questioned.

When Hoog, de Cat. Christ. Philippi. etc. p. 176 (1825), speaks of a council held at Philippi, 'imperantibus Constantini filiis,' he confuses Philippi with Philippopolis. See Socr. H. E. ii. 20, 22.

³ Flavianus, who takes an active part at the C. of Ephesus, A.D. 431; Labb. Conc. iii. 456 etc.

⁴ Le Quien, Or. Chr. ii. p. 70, gives the name of its bishop when he wrote (1740). Neale, Holy Eastern Church i. p. 92, mentions it among existing sees.

⁵ I ought to except one or two inscriptions lately published, Miss. Archéol. pp. 96, 97.

IV.

CHARACTER AND CONTENTS OF THE EPISTLE.

THE external circumstances, which suggested this epistle, Motive of the epistle. have been already explained. It must be ascribed to the close personal relations existing between the Apostle and his converts. It was not written, like the Epistle to the Galatians, to counteract doctrinal errors, or, like the First to the Corinthians, to correct irregularities of practice. It enforces no direct lessons of Church government, though it makes casual allusion to Church officers. It lays down no dogmatic system, though incidentally it refers to the majesty and the humiliation of Christ, and to the contrast of law and grace. It is the spontaneous utterance of Christian love and gratitude, called forth by a recent token which the Philippians had given of their loyal affection. As the pure expression of personal feeling, not directly evoked by doctrinal or practical errors, it closely resembles the Apostle's letter to another leading church of Macedonia, which likewise held a large place in his affections, the First Epistle to the Thessalonians.

But the Philippian Church was bound to the Apostle by Affectionate relations with the Philippians. closer ties than even the Thessalonian. His language in addressing the two has, it is true, very much in common; the absence of appeal to his apostolic authority, the pervading tone of satisfaction, even the individual expressions of love and praise. But in the Epistle to the Philippians the Apostle's commendation is more lavish, as his affection is deeper. He utters no misgivings of their loyalty, no suspicions of false play, no reproaches of disorderly living, no warnings against grosser sins. To the Philippians he had given the surest pledge of confidence which could be given by a high-minded and sensitive man, to whom it was of the highest importance for the sake of the great cause which he advocated to avoid the slightest breath of suspicion, and whose motives nevertheless were narrowly scanned and unscrupulously misrepresented. He had placed himself under pecuniary obligations to them. The alms sent from Philippi had relieved his wants even at Thessalonica.

Disputes and rivalries at Philippi.

Yet even at Philippi there was one drawback to his general satisfaction. A spirit of strife had sprung up in the church; if there were not open feuds and parties, there were at least disputes and rivalries. The differences related not to doctrinal but to social questions; and, while each eagerly asserted his own position, each severally claimed the Apostle's sympathies for himself.

St Paul
rebukes this growing spirit.

St Paul steps forward to check the growing tendency. This he does with characteristic delicacy, striking not less surely because he strikes for the most part indirectly. He begins by hinting to them that he is no partisan: he offers prayers and thanksgivings for all; he hopes well of all; he looks upon all as companions in grace; his heart yearns after all in Christ Jesus¹. He entreats them later on, to be 'steadfast in one spirit,' to 'strive together with one mind for the faith of the Gospel².' He implores them by all their deepest Christian experiences, by all their truest natural impulses, to 'be of one mind,' to 'do nothing from party-spirit or from vain-glory.' Having piled up phrase upon phrase in the 'tautology of earnestness³,' he holds out for their example the 'mind of Christ,' who, being higher than all, nevertheless did not assert His divine majesty, but became lowliest of the lowly. Towards the close of the epistle⁴ he returns again to the sub-

¹ See the studied repetition of πάντες in the paragraph i. 3—8.

² i. 27.

³ ii. 2, 3, 4.

⁴ iv. 2 sq.

ject; and here his language becomes more definite. He mentions by name two ladies, Euodia and Syntyche, who had taken a prominent part in these dissensions; he asks them to be reconciled; and he invites the aid of others, of his true yoke-fellow, of Clement, of the rest of his fellow-labourers, in cementing this reconciliation. He urges the Philippians generally to exhibit to the world a spectacle of *forbearance*¹. He reminds them of the peace of God, which surpasses all the thoughts of man. He entreats them lastly, by all that is noble and beautiful and good, to hear and to obey. If they do this, the God of peace will be with them.

Of errors in doctrine there is not the faintest trace in the Philippian Church. In one passage indeed, where the Apostle touches upon doctrinal subjects, he takes occasion to warn his converts against two antagonistic types of error—Judaic formalism on the one hand, and Antinomian license on the other. But while doing so he gives no hint that these dangerous tendencies were actually rife among them. The warning seems to have been suggested by circumstances external to the Philippian Church². Indirect reference to doctrinal error.

Of plan and arrangement there is even less than in St Paul's letters generally. The origin and motive of the epistle are hardly consistent with any systematic treatment. As in the Second Epistle to the Corinthians, the torrent of personal feeling is too strong to submit to any such restraint. Even the threefold division into the explanatory, doctrinal, and hortatory portions, which may generally be discerned in his epistles, is obliterated here. Absence of plan in the epistle.

At the same time the growth and structure of the epistle may be traced with tolerable clearness. After the opening salutation and thanksgiving, which in the intensity of his affection he prolongs to an unusual extent, the Apostle explains Structure of the epistle. i. 1—11.

¹ iv. 5 τὸ ἐπιεικὲς ὑμῶν γνωσθήτω κ.τ.λ. See the note there.

² Schinz, die Christliche Gemeinde zu Philippi (Zürich 1833), decides after a careful examination of the purport of this epistle, that the Philippian Church was not yet tainted by Judaism, and that the disputes were social rather than doctrinal. This result has been generally accepted by more recent writers.

- i. 12—26. his personal circumstances; the progress of the Gospel in Rome; the rivalry of his antagonists and the zeal of his adherents; his own hopes and fears. He then urges his converts to unity in the strong reiterative language which has been already noticed. This leads him to dwell on the humility of Christ, as the great exemplar; and the reference is followed up by a few general words of exhortation. Return-
- i. 27—ii. 16. ing from this to personal matters, he relates his anticipation of a speedy release; his purpose of sending Timothy; the recent illness and immediate return of Epaphroditus.
- ii. 17—30.

Here the letter, as originally conceived, seems drawing to a close. He commences what appears like a parting injunction: 'Finally, my brethren, farewell (rejoice) in the Lord.' 'To say the same things,' he adds, 'for me is not irksome, while for you it is safe.' He was intending, it would seem, after offering this apology by way of preface, to refer once more to their dissensions, to say a few words in acknowledgment of their gift, and then to close. Here however he seems to have been interrupted¹. Circumstances occur, which recall him from these joyful associations to the conflict which awaits him without and which is the great trial and sorrow of his life. He is informed, we may suppose, of some fresh attempt of the Judaizers in the metropolis to thwart and annoy him. What, if they should interfere at Philippi as they were doing at Rome, and tamper

Interruption and doctrinal portion.

¹ Ewald, die Sendschreiben etc. p. 448 sq., has explained with characteristic insight the sudden interruption and subsequent lengthening of the letter. I should be disposed however to make the break not after ii. 30 with Ewald, but after iii. 1 with Grotius. Moreover I cannot agree with the former in referring iii. 17, 18, 19, still to Judaic formalism rather than to Antinomian excess. See the notes on the third chapter.

Le Moyne, Var. Sac. ii. pp. 332, 343, suggested that two letters were combined in our Epistle to the Philippians, commenting on the plural in Polycarp (§ 3, ὅς καὶ ἀπὸν ὑμῶν ἔγραψεν ἐπιστολὰς); and Heinrichs (prol. p. 31 sq.), carrying out the same idea, supposed i. 1—iii. 1 ἐν κυρίῳ to be written to the Church generally, and iii. 2 τὰ αὐτὰ—iv. 20 to the rulers, the concluding verses iv. 21—23 being the close of the former letter. He was answered by J. F. Krause Dissert. Acad. (Regiom. 1811). Paulus, Heidelb. Jahrb. P. 7, p. 702 (1812), adopted the theory of Heinrichs, modifying it however by making the close of the second letter after iii. 9 instead of iii. 20. See Hoog de Cat. Christ. Phil. etc. p. 54 sq.

with the faith and loyalty of his converts? With this thought weighing on his spirit he resumes his letter. He bids the Philippians beware of these dogs, these base artisans, these mutilators of the flesh. This leads him to contrast his teaching with theirs, the true circumcision with the false, the power of faith with the inefficacy of works. But a caution is needed here. Warned off the abyss of formalism, might they not be swept into the vortex of license? There were those, who professed the Apostle's doctrine but did not follow his example; who availed themselves of his opposition to Judaism to justify the licentiousness of Heathenism; who held that, because 'all things were lawful,' therefore 'all things were expedient'; who would even 'continue in sin that grace might abound.' The doctrine of iii. 12—21. faith, he urges, does not support this inference; his own example does not countenance it. Moral progress is the obligation of the one and the rule of the other. To a church planted in the midst of a heathen population this peril was at least as great as the former. He had often raised his voice against it before; and he must add a word of warning now. He exhorts iv. 1. the Philippians to be steadfast in Christ.

Thus the doctrinal portion, which has occupied the Apostle since he resumed, is a parenthesis suggested by the circumstances of the moment. At length he takes up the thread of his subject, where he had dropped it when the letter was interrupted. He refers again to their dissensions. This was the topic on which repetition needed no apology. He mentions by name those chiefly at fault, and he appeals directly to those most able to heal the feuds. And now once more he seems drawing to a close: 'Farewell (rejoice) in the Lord alway: again I say, farewell (rejoice).' Yet still he lingers: this farewell is prolonged into an exhortation and a blessing. At length he gives his parting injunction: 'Finally, my brethren, whatsoever things are true, etc.' But something still remains unsaid. He has not yet thanked them for their gift by Epaphroditus, though he has alluded to it in passing. With a graceful intermingling of manly independence and courteous delicacy he acknowledges this token of their love, explaining his own circumstances and feelings at some length. At last the epistle

iv. 21—23. closes with the salutations and the usual benediction.

Analysis
of the epistle.

The following then is an analysis of the epistle :

- I. i. 1, 2. Opening salutation.
- i. 3—11. Thanksgiving and prayer for his converts.
- i. 12—26. Account of his personal circumstances and feelings ; and of the progress of the Gospel in Rome.
- II. i. 27—ii. 4. Exhortation to unity and self-negation.
- ii. 5—11. Christ the great pattern of humility.
- ii. 12—16. Practical following of His example.
- III. ii. 17—30. Explanation of his intended movements ; the purposed visit of Timothy ; the illness, recovery, and mission of Epaphroditus.
- IV. iii. 1. The Apostle begins his final injunctions ; but is interrupted and breaks off suddenly.

[iii. 2—iv. 1. He resumes ; and warns them against two antagonistic errors :

Judaism (iii. 3—14).

He contrasts the doctrine of works with the doctrine of grace ; his former life with his present. The doctrine of grace leads to a progressive morality. Thus he is brought to speak secondly of Antinomianism (iii. 15—iv. 1).

He points to his own example ; and warns his converts against diverging from the right path. He appeals to them as citizens of heaven.]

Here the digression ends ; the main thread of the letter is recovered ; and

- iv. 2, 3. The Apostle once more urges them to heal their dissensions, appealing to them by name.
- iv. 4—9. He exhorts them to joyfulness, to freedom from care, to the pursuit of all good aims.
- V. iv. 10—20. He gratefully acknowledges their alms received through Epaphroditus, and invokes a blessing on their thoughtful love.
- VI. iv. 21—23. Salutations from all and to all.
The farewell benediction.

The Epistle to the Philippians is not only the noblest reflexion of St Paul's personal character and spiritual illumination,^{Thoughts suggested by the epistle.} his large sympathies, his womanly tenderness, his delicate courtesy, his frank independence, his entire devotion to the Master's service; but as a monument of the power of the Gospel it yields in importance to none of the apostolic writings. Scarcely thirty years have passed since one Jesus was crucified as a malefactor in a remote province of the empire; scarcely ten since one Paul a Jew of Tarsus first told at Philippi the story of His cruel death; and what is the result? Imagine one, to whom the name of Christ had been hitherto a name only, led by circumstances to study this touching picture of the relations between St Paul, his fellow-labourers, his converts; and pausing to ask himself what unseen power had produced these marvellous results. Stronger than any associations of time or place, of race or profession, stronger than the instinctive sympathies of common interest or the natural ties of blood-relationship, a mysterious bond unites St Paul, Epaphroditus, the Philippian converts; them to the Apostle, and him to them, and each to the other. In this threefold cord of love the strands are so intertwined and knotted together, that the writer cannot conceive of them as disentangled. The joy of one must be the joy of all; the sorrow of one must be the sorrow of all.

The Apostle's language furnishes the reply to such a questioner. This unseen power is the 'power of Christ's resurrection'.¹
 This mutual love is diffused from 'the heart of Christ Jesus',² beating with His pulses and living by His life. When the contemporary heathen remarked how 'these Christians loved one another,' he felt that he was confronted by an unsolved enigma.
 The power which wrought the miracle was hidden from him.
 It was no new commandment indeed, for it appealed to the oldest and truest impulses of the human heart. And yet it was a new commandment; for in Christ's life and death and resurrection it had found not only an example and a sanction, but a power, a vitality, wholly unfelt and unknown before.

¹ Phil. iii. 10.² Phil. i. 8.

Its great lesson.

To all ages of the Church—to our own especially—this epistle reads a great lesson. While we are expending our strength on theological definitions or ecclesiastical rules, it recalls us from these distractions to the very heart and centre of the Gospel—the life of Christ and the life in Christ. Here is the meeting-point of all our differences, the healing of all our feuds, the true life alike of individuals and sects and churches: here doctrine and practice are wedded together; for here is the ‘Creed of creeds’ involved in and arising out of the Work of works.

The Genuineness of the Epistle.

INTERNAL evidence will appear to most readers to place the genuineness of the Epistle to the Philippians beyond the reach of doubt. This evidence is of two kinds, positive and negative. On the one hand the epistle completely reflects St Paul's mind and character, even in their finest shades. On the other, it offers no motive which could have led to a forgery. Only as the natural outpouring of personal feeling, called forth by immediate circumstances, is it in any way conceivable. A forger would not have produced a work so aimless (for aimless in his case it must have been), and could not have produced one so inartificial.

Nevertheless its genuineness has been canvassed. Evanson (Dissonance, etc. p. 263) led the van of this adverse criticism. At a later date Schrader (Der Apostel Paulus v. p. 201 sq.) threw out suspicions with regard to different portions of the epistle. More recently it has been condemned as spurious by Baur (see especially his Paulus p. 458 sq.), who is followed as usual by Schweigler (Nachap. Zeit. II. p. 133 sq.), and one or two others. His objections, says Bleek (Einl. ins N. T. p. 433), rest sometimes on perverse interpretations of separate passages, sometimes on arbitrary historical assumptions, while in other cases it is hard to conceive that they were meant in earnest.

I cannot think that the mere fact of their having been brought forward by men of ability and learning is sufficient to entitle objections of this stamp to a serious refutation. They have not the suggestive character which sometimes marks even the more extravagant theories of this school, and serve only as a warning of the condemnation which unrestrained negative criticism pronounces upon itself. In this epistle surely, if anywhere, the two complementary aspects of St Paul's person and teaching—his strong individuality of character and his equally strong sense of absorption in Christ—the 'I' and the 'yet not I' of his great antithesis—both appear with a force and a definiteness which carry thorough conviction. Hilgenfeld, the present leader of the Tübingen school, refused from the first to subscribe to his master's view respecting this epistle: and probably few in the present day would be found to maintain this opinion. The criticisms of Baur have been several times refuted: e. g. in the monographs of Lünemann Pauli ad Phil. Epist. defend., Göttingen 1847, and B. B. Brückner Epist. ad Phil. Paulo auctori vindic. Lips. 1848,

Internal evidence.

Genuine-ness questioned.

Objections need not be considered.

and in the introductions to the commentaries of Wiesinger, Eadie, and others. See also more recently Hilgenfeld Zeitschr. f. Wissensch. Theol. 1871 p. 192 sq., 309 sq., 1873 p. 178 sq.

Early quotations. The quotations from this epistle in early Christian writers are not so numerous, as they would probably have been, if it had contained more matter which was directly doctrinal or ecclesiastical. Among the Apostolic fathers CLEMENT OF ROME (§ 47) uses the phrase 'in the beginning of the Gospel' (Phil. iv. 15). Again he says, 'If we walk not worthily of Him' (μὴ ἀξίως αὐτοῦ πολιτευόμενοι, § 21; comp. Phil. i. 27). A third passage (§ 2), 'Ye were sincere and harmless and not mindful of injury one towards another,' resembles Phil. i. 10, ii. 15. And a fourth, in which he dwells upon the example of Christ's humility (§ 16), seems to reflect the familiar passage in Phil. ii. 5 sq. Though each resemblance in itself is indecisive, all combined suggest at least a probability that St Clement had seen this epistle. When IGNATIUS (Rom. 2) expresses his desire of being 'poured out as a libation (σπονδισθῆναι) to God, while yet the altar is ready,' this must be considered a reminiscence of Phil. ii. 17. In the Ignatian Epistle to the Philadelphians also (§ 8) the words 'do nothing from party-spirit (μηδὲν κατ' ἐριθείαν πράσσειν)' are taken from Phil. ii. 3; for in an earlier passage of the same letter (§ 1) the writer reproduces the second member of St Paul's sentence, 'nor from vainglory' (οὐδὲ κατὰ κενοδοξίαν). In the Ignatian Epistle to the Smyrnæans again the words § 4 'I endure all things, while He strengtheneth me' are derived from Phil. iv. 13, and § 11 'Being perfect be ye also perfectly minded' from Phil. iii. 15. POLYCARP, addressing the Philippians, more than once directly mentions St Paul's writing to them (§ 3, 11): he commences the body of the letter with an expression taken from this epistle, 'I rejoiced with you greatly in the Lord' (συνεχάρην ὑμῖν μεγάλως ἐν Κυρίῳ, comp. Phil. iv. 10 ἐχάρην δὲ ἐν Κυρίῳ μεγάλως): and in other passages his words are a reflexion of its language; e. g. § 2 'Unto whom all things were made subject that are in heaven and that are on the earth etc.,' of Phil. ii. 10; § 9 'I did not run in vain,' of Phil. ii. 16 (comp. Gal. ii. 2); § 10 'diligentes invicem, in veritate sociati, mansuetudinem Domini alterutri præstolantes,' of Phil. ii. 2—5; § 12 'inimicis crucis,' of Phil. iii. 18. The words ἐὰν πολιτευσώμεθα ἀξίως αὐτοῦ (§ 5) are perhaps taken from Clement of Rome (see above), though they resemble Phil. i. 27.

Hermas. When HERMAS, Vis. i. 3, writes 'they shall be written into the books of life,' he probably refers rather to Rev. xx. 15, than to Phil. iv. 3. Other coincidences, as Vis. iii. 13 'If anything be wanting it shall be revealed to thee' (Phil. iii. 15), Mand. v. 2 'Concerning giving or receiving' (Phil. iv. 15), are not sufficient to establish a connexion.

Test. XII Patriarchs. In the TESTAMENTS OF THE TWELVE PATRIARCHS, a Jewish Christian work probably dating early in the second century, a few expressions are borrowed from this epistle: Levi 4 'in the heart (ἐν σπλάγχνοις) of His Son,' from Phil. i. 8; Benj. 10 'Worshipping the king of the heavens who appeared on earth in the form of man' (ἐν μορφῇ ἀνθρώπου, to which one text adds ταπεινώσεως, comp. Phil. iii. 21), and Zab. 9 'Ye shall see in the fashion of man etc.' (ὁψεσθε ἐν σχήματι ἀνθρώπου; it is doubtful whether or not θεὸν should follow, but the reference is plainly to Christ), from Phil. ii. 6—8; Levi 14 'Ye are the luminaries (οἱ φωστῆρες) of the heaven,' from Phil. ii. 15.

The Apologists supply several references. In the EPISTLE TO DIOGNE-
TUS occur the words 'their dwelling is on earth but their citizenship is in heaven' (ἐπὶ γῆς διατρίβουσιν ἀλλ' ἐν οὐρανῷ πολιτεύονται § 5): comp. Phil. iii. 20. JUSTIN MARTYR [?] de Resurr. (c. 7. p. 592 D) also speaks of 'our heavenly citizenship,' and in another place (c. 9. p. 594 E) writes, 'The Lord has said that our dwelling is in heaven (ἐν οὐρανῷ ὑπάρχειν)'. In the second passage the reference is probably to such sayings as Joh. xiv. 2, 3; but the actual expression seems certainly to be borrowed from St Paul's language here. MELITO (Routh's Rel. Sacr. i. p. 122) designates our Lord Θεὸς ἀληθὴς προαιώνιος ὑπάρχων, perhaps having in his mind Phil. ii. 6; and again he writes (Spic. Solesm. ii. p. lviii, a fragment preserved in Syriac) 'servus reputatus est' and 'servi speciem indutus,' obviously from the context of the same passage in our epistle. THEOPHILUS (ad Autol.) more than once adopts expressions from this epistle; i. 2 'approving the things that are excellent,' either from Phil. i. 10 or from Rom. ii. 18; ii. 17 'minding earthly things' (τὰ ἐπίγεια φρονούντων), from Phil. iii. 19; iii. 36 'these things are true and useful and just and lovely (προσφιλῆ),' apparently from Phil. iv. 8; and again, as quoted by Jerome Epist. 121 (ad Algasiam), he writes 'Quæ antea pro lucro fuerant, reputari in stercora' from Phil. iii. 8 (if the work quoted by Jerome may be accepted as genuine).

In the EPISTLE OF THE CHURCHES OF VIENNE AND LYONS (A.D. 177) Churches
Euseb. H. E. v. 2, the text Phil. ii. 6 'who being in the form of God etc.' is of Gaul.
quoted.

In ANCIENT SYRIAC DOCUMENTS (edited by Cureton) it is said of Christ Syriac
(p. 14), 'He being God had appeared to them like men' (Phil. ii. 6, 7), and Docuin another writing of the same collection (p. 56) these words occur; 'One of the doctors of the Church has said: The scars indeed of my body—that I may come to the resurrection from the dead'; a combination of Gal. vi. 17 and Phil. iii. 11.

The SETHIANI, a very early heretical sect, are stated by Hippolytus Heretics.
(Hæres. v. p. 143, x. p. 318) to have interpreted the text Phil. ii. 6, 7, to explain their own doctrines. CASSIANUS a Valentinian (about 170) quotes Phil. iii. 20 (Clem. Alex. Strom. iii. 14, p. 554 Potter). And THEODOTUS (on the authority of the Excerpts published in the works of Clem. Alex.,
p. 966 Potter) has two distinct references to a passage in this epistle (Phil. ii. 7 in § 19 and § 35).

In the Apocryphal ACTS OF THOMAS § 27 we read 'The holy name of Apocry-Christ which is above every name' (τὸ ὑπὲρ πάντων ὄνομα), from Phil. ii. 9. phal Acts.

The Epistle to the Philippians appears in all the CANONS OF SCRIPTURE Canons of during the second century: in the lists of the heretic Marcion and of the Scripture.
Muratorian fragment, as well as in the Old Latin and Peshito Syriac versions.

Close of the 2nd century.

With the other Pauline Epistles of our Canon it is directly quoted and assigned to the Apostle by IRENÆUS, TERTULLIAN, and CLEMENT OF ALEXANDRIA. Tertullian more especially, in passages already quoted (p. 64, note 2), speaks of its having been read in the Philippian Church uninterruptedly to his own time. Though he may not say this from direct personal knowledge or precise information, yet the statement would not have been hazarded, unless the epistle had been universally received in the Church as far back as the traditions of his generation reached.

ΠΡΟΣ ΦΙΛΙΠΠΗΣΙΟΥΣ.

WE ALL ARE CHANGED INTO THE SAME IMAGE FROM GLORY TO GLORY, AS OF THE LORD THE SPIRIT.

BUT THE FRUIT OF THE SPIRIT IS LOVE, JOY, PEACE.

*And so the Word had breath, and wrought
With human hands the creed of creeds
In loveliness of perfect deeds,
More strong than all poetic thought.*

ΠΡΟΫ ΦΙΛΙΠΠΗΣΙΟΥΣ.

I. ΠΑΥΛΟΣ καὶ Τιμόθεος, δοῦλοι Χριστοῦ
Ἰησοῦ, πᾶσιν τοῖς ἁγίοις ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τοῖς οὖσιν

I. Παῦλος] The official title of Apostle is omitted here, as in the Epistles to the Thessalonians. In writing to the Macedonian Churches, with which his relations were so close and affectionate, St Paul would feel an appeal to his authority to be unnecessary. The same omission is found in the letter to Philemon, and must be similarly explained. He does not enforce a command as a superior, but asks a favour as a friend (Philem. 8, 9, 14). In direct contrast to this tone is the strong assertion of his Apostleship in writing to the Galatian Churches, where his authority and his doctrine alike were endangered.

Τιμόθεος] The intercourse between Timotheus and the Philippian Church had been constant and intimate. He had assisted the Apostle in its first foundation (Acts xvi. 1, 13, and xvii. 14). He had visited Philippi twice at least during the third missionary journey (Acts xix. 22, comp. 2 Cor. i. 1; and Acts xx. 3, 4, comp. Rom. xvi. 21). He was there not improbably more than once during the captivity at Cæsarea, when the Apostle himself was prevented from seeing them. And now again he was on the eve of another visit, having been chosen for this purpose, as one whose solicitude for the Philippians had become a second nature (γενεσιῶς μεριμνήσει ii. 20). In like manner his name is associated with St Paul in the letters to the other great church of Macedonia (1 Thess. i. 1, 2 Thess. i. 1).

But beyond the association of his name in the salutation, Timotheus takes no part in the letter. St Paul starts with the singular (ver. 3) which he maintains throughout; and having occasion to mention Timotheus speaks of him in the third person, ii. 19.

πᾶσιν] see the note on ver. 4.

τοῖς ἁγίοις] 'the saints,' i.e. the covenant people: a term transferred from the old dispensation to the new. The chosen race was a holy people (λαὸς ἅγιος), the Israelites were saints (ἅγιοι), by virtue of their consecration to Jehovah; see e.g. Exod. xix. 6, Deut. vii. 6, xiv. 2, 21, Dan. vii. 18, 22, 25, viii. 24. So 1 Macc. x. 39 τοῖς ἁγίοις τοῖς ἐν Ἱερουσαλὴμ. The Christian Church, having taken the place of the Jewish race, has inherited all its titles and privileges; it is 'a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation (ἔθνος ἅγιον), a peculiar people (1 Pet. ii. 9).' All who have entered into the Christian covenant by baptism are 'saints' in the language of the Apostles. Even the irregularities and profligacies of the Corinthian Church do not forfeit it this title. Thus the main idea of the term is consecration. But, though it does not assert moral qualifications as a fact in the persons so designated, it implies them as a duty. And it was probably because ἅγιος suggests the moral idea, which is entirely want-ἐν Φιλίπποις σὺν ἐπισκόποις καὶ διακόνοις. ² χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν καὶ κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

³ Εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ μου ἐπὶ πάσῃ τῇ μνηίᾳ ὑμῶν

ing to ιερός, that the former was adopted by the LXX translators as the common rendering of שָׂרֵף, while the latter is very rarely used by them in any sense: see esp. Lev. xi. 44 ἀγιασθήσεσθε καὶ ἄγιοι ἔσσεσθε ὅτι ἅγιός εἰμι ἐγώ.

ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ] to be connected with ἀγίοις. For the omission of the article see the notes on 1 Thess. i. 1.

ἐπισκόποις καὶ διακόνοις] ‘the presbyters and deacons.’ The contributions were probably sent to St Paul in the name of the officers, as well as of the church generally: comp. Acts xv. 23. Hence St Paul mentions them in reply. It seems hardly probable that this mention was intended, as some have thought, to strengthen the hands of the presbyters and deacons, their authority being endangered. The dissensions in the Philippian Church do not appear to have touched the officers. On ἐπίσκοπος and πρεσβύτερος, as interchangeable terms, see the detached note, p. 93.

2. χάρις ὑμῖν κ.τ.λ.] On the form of salutation see the note on 1 Thess. i. 1.

3. The thanksgiving in this epistle is more than usually earnest. The Apostle dwells long and fondly on the subject. He repeats words and accumulates clauses in the intensity of his feeling. As before in the omission of his official title, so here in the fulness of his thanksgiving, the letters to the Thessalonians present the nearest parallel to the language of this epistle: see introduction p. 65.

3—5. ‘I thank my God for you all at all times, as I think of you, whensoever I pray for you (and these prayers I offer with joy), for that you have co-operated with me to the furtherance of the Gospel from the day when you first heard of it to the present moment.’

The arrangement of the clauses in these verses is doubtful. They may be connected in various ways, and the punctuation will differ accordingly. On the whole however the words πάντοτε ἐν πάσῃ δεήσει μου ὑπὲρ πάντων ὑμῶν seem naturally to run together; and if so, we have the alternative of attaching them to the foregoing or to the following words. I have preferred the former for two reasons. (1) The structure of the passage is dislocated and its force weakened, by disconnecting clauses pointed out so obviously as correlative by the repetition of the same word πάσῃ, πάντοτε, πάσῃ, πάντων; see Lobeck Paral. p. 56. (2) The words μετὰ χαρᾶς τὴν δέξιν ποιούμενος seem to stand apart, as an explanatory clause defining the character of the foregoing πάσῃ δεήσει; for there would be great awkwardness in making one sentence of the two, ἐν πάσῃ δεήσει τὴν δέξιν ποιούμενος. For the connexion εὐχαριστεῖν πάντοτε (in most cases with περὶ or ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν) see 1 Cor. i. 4, 1 Thess. i. 2, 2 Thess. i. 3, ii. 13, Ephes. v. 20, and perhaps also Col. i. 3, Philem. 4: comp. also Ephes. i. 16 οὐ παύομαι εὐχαριστῶν.

τῷ Θεῷ μου] ‘my God.’ The singular expresses strongly the sense of a close personal relationship: comp. Acts xxvii. 23 ‘whose I am and whom I serve’: and see the note on Gal. ii. 20, and comp. iii. 8.

ἐπὶ πάσῃ τῇ μνηίᾳ] ‘in all my remembrance,’ not ‘on every remembrance (ἐπὶ πάσῃ μνηίᾳ),’ which would point rather to isolated, intermittent acts. On μνηία and εὐχαριστῶ see the notes 1 Thess. i. 2.

⁴ πάντοτε ἐν πάσῃ δεήσει μου ὑπὲρ πάντων ὑμῶν, μετὰ χαρᾶς τὴν δέησιν ποιούμενος, ⁵ ἐπὶ τῇ κοινωνίᾳ ὑμῶν εἰς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον ἀπὸ [τῆς] πρώτης ἡμέρας ἄχρι τοῦ νῦν.

4. ὑπὲρ πάντων ὑμῶν] should be connected rather with εὐχαριστῶ than with ἐν πάσῃ δεήσει, for the following reasons. (1) The words are more naturally taken as independent and co-ordinate with all the preceding clauses, ἐπὶ πάσῃ τῇ μνείᾳ, πάντοτε, ἐν πάσῃ δεήσει, than as dependent on any one singly. (2) The stress of the Apostle's statement is rather on the thanksgiving for all than the prayer for all, as he is dwelling on their good deeds. (3) In the parallel passages already quoted the common connexion is εὐχαριστεῖν ὑπὲρ (or περὶ) ὑμῶν.

There is a studied repetition of the word 'all' in this epistle, when the Philippian Church is mentioned: see i. 2, 7 (ὑπὲρ πάντων ὑμῶν, πάντας ὑμᾶς), 8, 25, ii. 17, iv. 21. It is impossible not to connect this recurrence of the word with the strong and repeated exhortations to unity which the epistle contains (i. 27, ii. 1—4, iv. 2, 3, 5, 7, 9). The Apostle seems to say, 'I make no difference between man and man, or between party and party: my heart is open to all; my prayers, my thanksgivings, my hopes, my obligations, extend to all.' See the introduction, p. 66.

μετὰ χαρᾶς κ.τ.λ.] 'Summa epistolæ,' says Bengel, 'gaudeo gaudete': comp. i. 18, 25, ii. 2, 17, 18, 28, 29, iii. 1, iv. 1, 4, 10. The article before δέησιν refers it back to the previous δεήσει.

5. ἐπὶ τῇ κοινωνίᾳ κ.τ.λ.] The previous clause μετὰ χαρᾶς τὴν δέησιν ποιούμενος being a parenthesis, these words are connected with εὐχαριστῶ. For εὐχαριστεῖν ἐπὶ see 1 Cor. i. 4. The words signify not 'your participation in the Gospel' (τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, comp. ii. 1, iii. 10), but 'your cooperation towards, in aid of the Gospel' (εἰς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον). For the construction see 2 Cor. ix. 13 ἀπλότῃ τῆς κοινωνίας εἰς αὐτούς, Rom. xv. 26 κοινωνίαν τινὰ ποιήσασθαι εἰς τοὺς πτωχοὺς. In the passages just quoted κοινωνία has a restricted meaning, 'contributions, almsgiving' (as also in 2 Cor. viii. 4, Hebr. xiii. 16; so κοινωνεῖν, Rom. xii. 13; κοινωνικός, 1 Tim. vi. 18; see Fritzsche Rom. iii. p. 81); but here, as the context shows, it denotes cooperation in the widest sense, their participation with the Apostle whether in sympathy or in suffering or in active labour or in any other way. At the same time their almsgiving was a signal instance of this cooperation, and seems to have been foremost in the Apostle's mind. In this particular way they had cooperated from the very first (ἀπὸ τῆς πρώτης ἡμέρας) when on his departure from Philippi they sent contributions to Thessalonica and to Corinth (iv. 15, 16 ἐν ἀρχῇ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου), and up to the present time (ἄχρι τοῦ νῦν) when again they had despatched supplies to Rome by the hands of Epaphroditus (iv. 10 ἡδηπότε).

πρώτης] 'the first.' The article is frequently omitted, because the numeral is sufficiently definite in itself: comp. Mark xii. 28—30, xvi. 9, Acts xii. 10, xvi. 12, xx. 18, Ephes. vi. 2. Here some of the oldest MSS read τῆς πρώτης, but the article might perhaps be suspected, as a likely addition of some transcriber for the sake of greater precision.

6, 7. 'I have much ground for thanksgiving; thanksgiving for past experience, and thanksgiving for future hope. I am sure, that as God has inaugurated a good work in you, so He will complete the same, that it may be prepared to stand the test in the day of Christ's advent. I have every reason to think thus favourably of you all: for the remembrance is ever in my heart, how you—yes, all of you—have tendered me your aid and love, whether in bearing the sorrows of my captivity or in actively defending and promoting the Gospel: a manifest token that ye all are partakers with me of the grace of God.’

⁶ πεποιθὼς αὐτὸ τοῦτο, ὅτι ὁ ἐναρξάμενος ἐν ὑμῖν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἐπιτελέσει ἄχρι[s] ἡμέρας Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ⁷ καθὼς ἐστὶν δίκαιον ἐμοὶ τοῦτο φρονεῖν ὑπὲρ πάντων ὑμῶν, διὰ τὸ ἔχειν με ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ ὑμᾶς ἐν τε τοῖς δεσμοῖς

6. ἡμέρας Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ.

6. πεποιθὼς αὐτὸ τοῦτο] ‘since I have this very confidence.’ This assurance, built on the experience of the past, enables the Apostle to anticipate matter for thankfulness. For αὐτὸ τοῦτο comp. Gal. ii. 10, 2 Cor. ii. 3, 2 Pet. i. 5 (with a v. l.) The order alone seems sufficient to exclude another proposed rendering of αὐτὸ τοῦτο, ‘on this very account,’ i.e. ‘by reason of your past cooperation.’

ὁ ἐναρξάμενος] The words ἐνάρχεσθαι, ἐπιτελεῖν, possibly contain a sacrificial metaphor: see the notes on Gal. iii. 3, and compare ii. 17 εἰ καὶ σπένδομαι ἐπὶ τῇ θυσίᾳ. For the omission of Θεὸς before ὁ ἐναρξάμενος compare Gal. i. 6, 15 (notes).

ἔργον ἀγαθόν] By this ‘good work’ is meant their cooperation with and affection for the Apostle. By the workers of this work St Paul doubtless means the Philippians themselves. Nevertheless it is God’s doing from beginning to end: He inaugurates and He completes. This paradox of all true religion is still more broadly stated in ii. 12, 13, ‘Work out your own salvation, for it is God that worketh in you both to will and to work etc.’

ἄχρις ἡμέρας Ἰησοῦ] refers to the foregoing notes of time, ἀπὸ πρώτης ἡμέρας and ἄχρι τοῦ νῦν; but the expression implies something more than a temporal limit. The idea of a testing is prominent: ‘God will advance you in grace, so that you may be prepared to meet the day of trial.’ On the meaning of ἡμέρα and on the absence of the definite article see the notes on 1 Thess. v. 2.

As ‘the day of Christ’ is thus a more appropriate limit than ‘the day of your death,’ it must not be hastily inferred from this expression that St Paul confidently expected the Lord’s advent during the lifetime of his Philippian converts. On the other hand, some anticipation of its near approach seems to underlie ἄχρις here, as it is implied in St Paul’s language elsewhere, e.g. in ἡμεῖς οἱ ζῶντες 1 Thess. iv. 17, and in πάντες οὐ κοιμηθησόμεθα (probably the correct reading) 1 Cor. xv. 51.

7. This confidence is justified by their past cooperation, which is indelibly stamped on the Apostle’s memory. The stress of the reason (διὰ), which is the foundation of this assurance, rests not on ἔχειν ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ but on συνκινωνοὺς τῆς χάριτος, not on the act of remembering but on the thing remembered.

καθὼς] See the note Gal. iii. 6. τοῦτο φρονεῖν κ.τ.λ.] ‘to entertain this opinion concerning you all.’ On the difference between ὑπὲρ and περὶ see the note on Gal. i. 4, and comp. Winer § xlvii. p. 401.

διὰ τὸ ἔχειν με κ.τ.λ.] ‘because I have you’; not, as it is sometimes taken, ‘because you have me.’ The order of the words points to this as the correct rendering; and the appeal which follows, ‘for God is my witness,’ requires it.

ἐν τε τοῖς δεσμοῖς κ.τ.λ.] Are these words to be taken with the foregoing or with the following clause? According as they are attached to the μου καὶ ἐν τῇ ἀπολογίᾳ καὶ βεβαιώσει τοῦ εὐαγγελίου συνκοινωνούς μου τῆς χάριτος πάντας ὑμᾶς ὄντας· ⁸ μάρ-τυς γάρ μου ὁ Θεός, ὡς ἐπιποθῶ πάντας ὑμᾶς ἐν σπλάγone or the other, their meaning will be different. (1) If we connect them with what precedes, ἐν will be temporal, and the sense will then be, 'I bear this in mind, both when I am in bonds and when I am pleading my cause in court.' But even if there were ground for supposing that the trial had already begun, the clause is thus rendered almost meaningless. (2) On the other hand, if they are attached to the following words, the sense is easy: 'participators with me both in my bonds and in my defence and maintenance of the Gospel,' i.e. 'If I have suffered, so have you; if I have laboured actively for the Gospel, so have you': comp. vv. 29, 30.

τῇ ἀπολογίᾳ κ.τ.λ.] The two words, being connected by the same article, combine to form one idea. As ἀπολογία implies the negative or defensive side of the Apostle's preaching, the preparatory process of removing obstacles and prejudices, so βεβαίωσις denotes the positive or aggressive side, the direct advancement and establishment of the Gospel. The two together will thus comprise all modes of preaching and extending the truth. For ἀπολογία see ver. 16; for βεβαίωσις 1 Cor. i. 6.

συνκοινωνούς μου κ.τ.λ.] 'partakers with me in grace.' The genitives are best treated as separate and independent, so e.g. ii. 30: comp. Winer § xxx p. 204. In this case ἡ χάρις with the definite article stands absolutely for 'the divine grace,' as frequently: e.g. Acts xviii. 27, 2 Cor. iv. 15, Gal. v. 4, Ephes. ii. 8. 'Grace' applies equally to the 'bonds,' and to the 'defence and confirmation of the Gospel.' If it is a privilege to preach Christ, it is not less a privilege to suffer for Him: comp. ver. 29 ὑμῖν ἐχαρίσθη τὸ ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ, οὐ μόνον τὸ εἶς αὐτὸν πιστεύειν ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ ὑπὲρ αὐτοῦ πάσχειν. A more special rendering of the passage is sometimes adopted, 'joint-contributors to the gift which I have received': see e.g. Paley's Hor. Paul. vii. 1. But though χάρις sometimes refers specially to almsgiving (e.g. 1 Cor. xvi. 3, 2 Cor. viii. 4), such a restriction here seems to sever this clause from the context and to destroy the whole force of the passage.

ὑμᾶς] repeated: comp. Col. ii. 13 (the correct reading), and see Winer § xxii. p. 160.

8. 'I call God to witness that I did not exaggerate, when I spoke of having you all in my heart.' The same form of attestation occurs in Rom. i. 9: see also 2 Cor. i. 23, 1 Thess. ii. 5, 10.

ἐπιποθῶ] 'I yearn after.' The preposition in itself signifies merely direction; but the idea of straining after the object being thereby suggested, it gets to imply eagerness: comp. Diod. Sic. xvii. 101 παρόντι μὲν οὐ χρησάμενος ἀπόντα δὲ ἐπιποθήσας. It is a significant fact, pointing to the greater intensity of the language, that, while the simple words πόθος, ποθεῖν, etc. are never found in the New Testament, the compounds ἐπιποθεῖν, ἐπιποθία, ἐπιπόθησις, ἐπιπόθητος, occur with tolerable frequency.

ἐν σπλάγχνοις κ.τ.λ.] 'Did I speak of having you in my own heart? I should rather have said that in the heart of Christ Jesus I long for you.' A powerful metaphor describing perfect union. The believer has no yearnings apart from his Lord; his pulse beats with the pulse of Christ; his heart throbs with the heart of Christ. 'In Paulo non Paulus vivit,' says Bengel, 'sed Jesus Christus'; see the note on Gal. ii. 20. Comp. Test. xii Patr. Levi 4 ἐν σπλάγχνοις υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ. Theophilus χνοις Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ· ⁹καὶ τοῦτο προσεύχομαι, ἵνα ἡ ἀγάπη ὑμῶν ἔτι μᾶλλον καὶ μᾶλλον περισσεύῃ ἐν ἐπιγνώσει καὶ πάσῃ αἰσθήσει, ¹⁰εἰς τὸ δοκιμάζειν ὑμᾶς τὰ διαφέροντα, ἵνα ᾗτε εἰλικρινεῖς καὶ ἀπρόσκοποι εἰς ἡμέραν

9. μᾶλλον περισσεύση.

(ad Autol. ii. 10, 22) uses σπλάγχνα and καρδιά as convertible terms, speaking of the Word in one passage as ἐνδιάθετον ἐν τοῖς ἰδίοις σπλάγχνοις (τοῦ Θεοῦ), in another as ἐνδιάθετον ἐν καρδίᾳ Θεοῦ.

The σπλάγχνα are properly the nobler viscera, the heart, lungs, liver etc., as distinguished from the ἔντερα, the lower viscera, the intestines: e.g. Æsch. Agam. 1221 σὺν ἐντέροις τε σπλάγχνα. The σπλάγχνα alone seem to be regarded by the Greeks as the seat of the affections, whether anger, love, pity, or jealousy. On the other hand no such distinction is observed in Hebrew. The words רִמְמָה, רִמְמָה, and even בֶּרֶךְ, which occur commonly in this metaphorical sense, seem to correspond rather to ἔντερα than to σπλάγχνα: whence even κοιλία and ἔγκατα are so used in the LXX. The verb σπλαγχνίζεσθαι seems not to be classical, and was perhaps a coinage of the Jewish dispersion, the metaphor being much more common in Hebrew than in Greek.

9. 'I spoke of praying for you (ver. 4). This then is the purport of my prayer (τοῦτο προσεύχομαι), that your love may ever grow and grow, in the attainment of perfect knowledge and universal discernment.'

ἵνα] introduces the clause which describes the purport of τοῦτο. For this connexion of τοῦτο ἵνα compare 1 Joh. iv. 17: see also 3 Joh. 4 μείζοντάς τούτων οὐκ ἔχω χαρὰν ἵνα ἀκούω κ.τ.λ., Joh. xv. 13 μείζονα ταύτης ἀγάπην οὐδεὶς ἔχει ἵνα τις τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ θῇ κ.τ.λ. For such later usages of ἵνα, which in older classical Greek always denotes motive or design, see the notes on 1 Thess. ii. 16, v. 4, Gal. v. 17.

ἡ ἀγάπη] 'love,' neither towards the Apostle alone nor towards one another alone, but love absolutely, the inward state of the soul.

ἔτι μᾶλλον κ.τ.λ.] An accumulation of words to denote superabundance, as below ver. 23. The present (περισσεύῃ), perhaps better supported than the aorist (περισσεύσῃ), is certainly more in place, as expressing the continuous growth.

ἐπιγνώσει] 'advanced, perfect knowledge.' The intensive preposition (ἐπί) before γνώσει answers to the adjective before αἰσθήσει. Comp. 1 Cor. xiii. 12 ἄρτι γινώσκω ἐκ μέρους τότε δὲ ἐπιγνώσομαι: see also the distinction of γνώσις and ἐπίγνωσις in Justin Dial. p. 220 D. The substantive, which appears in St Paul in the Epistle to the Romans (i. 28, x. 2) for the first time, is found several times in the letters of the captivity and afterwards. Its more frequent occurrence thus corresponds to the more contemplative aspect of the Gospel presented in these later epistles.

πάσῃ αἰσθήσει] 'all perception.' Love imparts a sensitiveness of touch, gives a keen edge to the discriminating faculty, in things moral and spiritual. While ἐπίγνωσις deals with general principles, αἴσθησις is concerned with practical applications. The latter word does not occur elsewhere in the New Testament, but αἰσθητήρια is used similarly to denote the organs of moral sense, Heb. v. 14 τῶν διὰ τὴν ἔξιν τὰ αἰσθητήρια γεγυμνασμένα ἔχόντων πρὸς διάκρισιν καλοῦ τε καὶ κακοῦ: comp. Jer. iv. 19 τὰ αἰσθητήρια τῆς καρδίας.

10. τὰ διαφέροντα] not 'things which are opposed,' as good and bad (so for instance Fritzsche Rom. i. p. 129)—for it requires no keen moral sense to discriminate between these—but Χριστοῦ, ¹¹ πεπληρωμένοι καρπὸν δικαιοσύνης τὸν διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ εἰς δόξαν καὶ ἔπαινον Θεοῦ.

¹² Γινώσκειν δὲ ὑμᾶς βούλομαι, ἀδελφοί, ὅτι τὰ κατ' ἐμὲ μᾶλλον εἰς προκοπὴν τοῦ εὐαγγελίου ἐλήλυθεν,

'things that transcend,' ex bonis meliora in Bengel's words. The phrase δοκιμάζειν τὰ διαφέροντα occurs also Rom. ii. 18.

ἐιλικρινεῖς] signifies properly 'distinct, unmixed,' and hence 'pure, unsullied.' The probable derivation and first meaning of the word (a strategical term, εἴλη, εἰληδόν, 'gregatim,' comp. φυλοκρινεῖν) are suggested by Xen. Cyrop. viii. 5. 14 καὶ διὰ τὸ εἰλικρινῆ ἔκαστα εἶναι [τὰ φύλα], πολλὸν μᾶλλον ἢν δῆλα, καὶ ὅποτε τις εὐτακτοῖ καὶ εἴ τις μὴ πράττοι τὸ προσταττόμενον. A different account of the word however (deriving it from εἴλη, 'sunlight') is generally received.

ἀπρόσκοποι] might be either intransitive, 'without stumbling,' as Acts xxiv. 16 ἀπρόσκοπον συνείδησιν ἔχειν πρὸς τὸν Θεόν, or transitive, 'not causing offence,' as 1 Cor. x. 32 ἀπρόσκοποι καὶ Ἰουδαίους γίνεσθε καὶ Ἑλλήσιν. If the former sense be taken, ἐιλικρινεῖς and ἀπρόσκοποι will be related to each other as the positive and the negative: if the latter, they will denote respectively the relation to God (ἐιλικρινεῖς) and the relation to men (ἀπρόσκοποι). The former is to be preferred; for it is a question solely of the fitness of the Philippians to appear before the tribunal of Christ, and any reference to their influence on others would be out of place. Comp. Jude 24, 25, τῷ δὲ δυναμένῳ φυλάξαι ὑμᾶς ἀπταιστους καὶ στήσαι κατενώπιον τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ ἀμώμους κ.τ.λ.

εἰς ἡμέραν Χριστοῦ] not 'until,' but 'for the day of Christ'; comp. ii. 16, and see also i. 6.

11. καρπὸν δικαιοσύνης] The expression is taken from the Old Testament, e.g. Prov. xi. 30, Amos vi. 12, and occurs also James iii. 18. For the accusative after πληροῦσθαι comp. Col. i. 9: similarly Luke xi. 46 φορτίζετε τοὺς ἀνθρώπους φορτία δυσβάστακτα. See Winer § xxxii. p. 242.

τὸν διὰ Ἰησοῦ] added to guard against misunderstanding. The Apostle means 'righteousness in Christ,' as contrasted with 'righteousness by law': comp. iii. 9. Only so far as the life of the believer is absorbed in the life of Christ, does the righteousness of Christ become his own. Thus righteousness by faith is intimately bound up with the life in Christ: it must in its very nature be fruitful; it is indeed the condition of bearing fruit. Comp. John xv. 4 'As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine, no more can ye, except ye abide in me.'

εἰς δόξαν κ.τ.λ.] The only true aim of all human endeavours: comp. ii. 11. 'The glory,' the manifestation of His power and grace; 'the praise,' the recognition of these divine attributes by men: comp. Ephes. i. 6 εἰς ἔπαινον δόξης τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ, ib. i. 12, 14.

12. 'Lest you should be misinformed, I would have you know that my sufferings and restraints, so far from being prejudicial to the Gospel, have served to advance it. My bonds have borne witness to Christ, not only among the soldiers of the imperial guard, but in a far wider circle. The same bonds too have through my example inspired most of the brethren with boldness, so that trusting in the Lord they are more zealous than ever, and preach the word of God courageously and unflinchingly.'

τὰ κατ' ἐμὲ] 'my circumstances,' as Col. iv. 7, Ephes. vi. 21: comp. Tobit x. 8, 1 Esdr. i. 22.

μᾶλλον] 'rather' than the reverse, as might have been anticipated.

¹³ ὥστε τοὺς δεσμούς μου φανεροὺς ἐν Χριστῷ γενέσθαι ἐν ὅλῳ τῷ πραιτωρίῳ καὶ τοῖς λοιποῖς πᾶσιν, ¹⁴ καὶ τοῖς πλείονας τῶν ἀδελφῶν ἐν κυρίῳ πεποιθότας τοῖς δεσμοῖς μου περισσοτέρως τολμᾶν ἀφόβως τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ προκοπήν] The verb προκόπτειν is strictly classical; not so the substantive, which is condemned in Phrynichus (Lobeck, p. 85). It is however common in writers of this age.

13. φανεροὺς κ.τ.λ.] ‘have become manifest in Christ,’ i.e. ‘have been seen in their relation to Christ, have borne testimony to the Gospel.’

ἐν ὅλῳ τῷ πραιτωρίῳ] ‘throughout the prætorian guard,’ i.e. the soldiers composing the imperial regiments. This seems to be the best supported meaning of πραιτώριον. If a local sense is assigned to it, it will probably signify the ‘prætorian camp,’ but clear examples of this sense are wanting: see the detached note, p. 97. On St Paul’s intercourse with the prætorian soldiers see the introduction, pp. 7, 19.

τοῖς λοιποῖς πᾶσιν] ‘to all the rest’: comp. 2 Cor. xiii. 2; a comprehensive expression, which must not be rigorously interpreted: see the introduction, p. 32. The translation of the Authorised Version, ‘in all other places,’ will not stand.

14. τοὺς πλείονας] ‘the greater number.’ St Paul excepts a minority, who through cowardice or indifference held back.

ἐν κυρίῳ] to be taken with πεποιθότας τοῖς δεσμοῖς μου. Similarly Gal. v. 10 πέποιθα εἰς ὑμᾶς ἐν κυρίῳ, 2 Thess. iii. 4 πεποιθामεν δὲ ἐν κυρίῳ ἐφ’ ὑμᾶς. Comp. also below ii. 24, Rom. xiv. 14. The words ἐν κυρίῳ are thus emphatic by their position. They cannot well be attached to τῶν ἀδελφῶν, as τῶν ἀδελφῶν alone designates the Christian brotherhood, and the addition would be unmeaning. The instances quoted in favour of this connexion (Col. i. 2, iv. 7, Ephes. vi. 21) are no correct parallels; for in none of these passages does the preposition depend directly on ἀδελφός. For πέποιθα, with a dative of the thing in which the confidence reposes (τοῖς δεσμοῖς), see Phil. 21.

περισσοτέρως] This word seems never to lose its comparative force: see the note on Gal. i. 14. Here it denotes the increased zeal of the brethren, when stimulated by St Paul’s endurance. The Apostle accumulates words expressive of courage, πεποιθότας, περισσοτέρως, τολμᾶν ἀφόβως, as above in ver. 9 (see the note).

τοῦ Θεοῦ] These words, which are wanting in the received reading, have a decided preponderance of authority in their favour, and should probably stand in the text: comp. Acts iv. 31 ἐλάλουν τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ μετὰ παρρησίας.

15—17. ‘But though all alike are active, all are not influenced by the same motives. Some preach Christ to gratify an envious and quarrelsome spirit: others to manifest their goodwill. The latter work from love, acknowledging that I am appointed to plead for the Gospel: the former proclaim Christ from headstrong partisanship and with impure motives, having no other aim than to render my bonds more galling.’

These antagonists can be none other than the Judaizing party, who call down the Apostle’s rebuke in a later passage of this letter (iii. 2 sq.) and whose opposition is indirectly implied in another epistle written also from Rome (Col. iv. 11): see above, pp. 17, 18. They preach Christ indeed, but their motives are not single. Their real object is to gain adherents to the law. The main-spring of their activity

λαλεῖν· ¹⁵ τινὲς μὲν καὶ διὰ φθόνον καὶ ἔριν, τινὲς δὲ καὶ δι' εὐδοκίαν τὸν Χριστὸν κηρύσσουσιν· ¹⁶ οἱ μὲν ἐξ ἀγάπης, εἰδότες ὅτι εἰς ἀπολογίαὶ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου κείμεναι, ¹⁷ οἱ

is a factious opposition to the Apostle, a jealousy of his influence. They value success, not as a triumph over heathendom, but as a triumph over St Paul. It enhances their satisfaction to think that his sufferings will be made more poignant by their progress.

But how, it has been asked, can St Paul rejoice in the success of such teachers? Is not this satisfaction inconsistent with his principles? Does he not in the Epistle to the Galatians for instance wholly repudiate their doctrine, and even maintain that for those who hold it Christ has died in vain? This apparent incongruity has led some writers to deny any reference to the Judaizers here; while to others it has furnished an argument against the genuineness of the whole epistle. But the two cases are entirely different. In the one, where the alternative is between the liberty of the Gospel and the bondage of ritualism, he unsparingly denounces his Galatian converts for abandoning the former and adopting the latter. Here on the other hand the choice is between an imperfect Christianity and an unconverted state; the former, however inadequate, must be a gain upon the latter, and therefore must give joy to a high-minded servant of Christ. In Rome there was room enough for him and for them. He was content therefore that each should work on independently. It was a step in advance to know Christ, even though He were known only 'after the flesh.'

καὶ διὰ φθόνον] 'even from envy,' monstrous as this will seem. For διὰ φθόνον see Matt. xxvii. 18, Mark xv. 10. Philemon the comic poet (Meineke, iv. p. 55), πολλὰ με διδάσκεις ἀφθόνως διὰ φθόνον, has been quoted in illustration of this passage.

καὶ δι' εὐδοκίαν] 'also out of goodwill'; this second καὶ must be differently translated from the former. The substantive εὐδοκία may mean either (1) 'purpose, design, desire,' Eccclus. xi. 17 ἡ εὐδοκία αὐτοῦ εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα εὐδοθήσεται, Rom. x. 1 ἡ εὐδοκία τῆς ἐμῆς καρδίας καὶ ἡ δέξις πρὸς τὸν Θεόν; or (2) 'satisfaction, contentment, happiness,' Eccclus. xxxv. 14 οἱ ὀρθρίζοντες εὐρήσουσιν εὐδοκίαν, 2 Thess. i. 11 πᾶσαν εὐδοκίαν ἀγαθωσύνης; or (3) 'benevolence, goodwill,' Ps. l. 20 ἀγάθυνον, Κύριε, ἐν τῇ εὐδοκίᾳ σου τὴν Σιών, cv. 4; and perhaps Luke ii. 14. These different significations arise out of the object to which εὐδοκία is directed. In the first case it refers to things future, in the second to things present, in the third to persons. Fritzsche (Rom. ii. p. 371) has separated the different meanings of this word, but is not happy in his examples. In the present passage the opposition to διὰ φθόνον καὶ ἔριν seems to require the third meaning.

16, 17. The order of the clauses is reversed by the figure called chiasm, so that the subject last introduced is discussed first; as e.g. Gal. iv. 4, 5. In the received text the verses are transposed, with a view to remedying this supposed irregularity.

ἐξ ἀγάπης] 'the one preach Christ out of love'; and ἐξ ἐριθείας must be similarly taken. Others connect οἱ ἐξ ἐριθείας, οἱ ἐξ ἀγάπης, 'the factious,' 'the loving,' comparing Rom. ii. 8 τοῖς δὲ ἐξ ἐριθείας (see also iii. 26, Gal. iii. 7, 9); but the order in the second clause is very awkward with this arrangement, which makes τὸν Χριστὸν καταγγέλλουσιν unduly emphatic.

κείμεναι] 'I am appointed,' as Luke ii. 34 οὗτος κεῖται εἰς πτώσιν καὶ ἀνάστασιν πολλῶν, 1 Thess. iii. 3 αὐτοὶ γὰρ δὲ ἐξ ἐριθείας [τὸν] Χριστὸν καταγγέλλουσιν οὐχ ἀγνῶς, οἰόμενοι θλίψιν ἐγείρειν τοῖς δεσμοῖς μου. ¹⁸ τί γάρ; πλὴν ὅτι παντὶ τρόπῳ, εἴτε προφάσει εἴτε ἀληθείᾳ, Χριστὸς καταγγέλλεται, καὶ ἐν τούτῳ χαίρω· ἀλλὰ καὶ χαρήσομαι. ¹⁹ οἶδα γὰρ ὅτι τοῦτό μοι ἀπο-

19. οἶδα δὲ ὅτι.

οἶδατε ὅτι εἰς τοῦτο κείμεθα: comp. Josh. iv. 6. The idea of prostration, if implied at all, can only be subordinate.

17. ἐξ ἐριθείας] The interests of party were predominant with the Judaizers; their missionary zeal took the form of a political canvass. For the proper meaning of ἐριθεία, 'partisanship,' see the note on Gal. v. 20. The words τὸν Χριστὸν καταγγέλλουσιν seem to be added to bring out the contrast between the character of their motives and the subject of their preaching; for there is a moral contradiction between ἐριθεία and Χριστός.

οὐχ ἀγνῶς] 'with mixed, impure motives,' explained afterwards by προφάσει. The insincere, selfish, and even sordid motives of the Judaizers are denounced in other passages also: 2 Cor. xi. 13, 20, Gal. vi. 12.

θλίψιν ἐγείρειν] 'to make my chains gall me,' where the metaphor in θλίψις is clearly seen. This word, though extremely common in the LXX, occurs very rarely in classical writers even of a late date, and in these few passages has its literal meaning. The same want in the religious vocabulary, which gave currency to θλίψις, also created 'tribulatio' as its Latin equivalent. On the accent of θλίψις see Lipsius Gramm. Unters. p. 35. The reading ἐγείρειν, besides being better supported, carries out the metaphor better than ἐπιφέρειν of the received text. The gathering opposition to the Apostle's doctrine of liberty, the forming of a compact party in the Church bound to the observance of the law, were the means by which they sought to annoy and wound him.

18. τί γάρ;] 'What then,' as Xen. Mem. ii. 6. 2, 3, iii. 3. 6, and commonly in classical writers: comp. also LXX, Job xvi. 3, xxi. 4.

πλὴν ὅτι] 'only that,' as Acts xx. 23; comp. Plut. Mor. p. 780 A, Plato Phaed. p. 57 B, Theat. p. 183 A. This seems on the whole the most probable reading. Some texts have πλὴν alone, others ὅτι alone; both which readings appear like attempts to smooth the construction. The latter however, which is supported by one excellent authority, may possibly be correct.

προφάσει] 'as a cloke for other designs,' i.e. using the name of Christ to promote the interests of their party and to gain proselytes to the law. On πρόφασις, 'an ostensible purpose,' generally but not necessarily implying insincerity, see the note on 1 Thess. ii. 5. The opposition of πρόφασις and ἀλήθεια is illustrated by numerous examples in Wetstein and Raphael.

ἐν τούτῳ] 'herein,' i.e. ἐν τῷ καταγγέλλεσθαι Χριστόν.

ἀλλὰ καὶ χαρήσομαι] 'yea and I shall rejoice.' The abruptness reflects the conflict in the Apostle's mind: he crushes the feeling of personal annoyance, which rises up at the thought of this unscrupulous antagonism. The A. V. however, 'I will rejoice,' brings out the idea of determination more strongly than the original justifies.

19, 20. 'Is not my joy reasonable? For I know that all my present trials and sufferings will lead only to my salvation, and that in answer to your prayers the Spirit of Christ will be shed abundantly upon me. Thus will be βήσεται εἰς σωτηρίαν διὰ τῆς ὑμῶν δεήσεως καὶ ἐπιχορηγίας τοῦ πνεύματος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ²⁰κατὰ τὴν ἀποκαταδοκίαν καὶ ἐλπίδα μου, ὅτι ἐν οὐδενὶ αἰσχυνθήσομαι, ἀλλ' ἐν πάσῃ παρρησίᾳ ὡς πάντοτε καὶ νῦν μεγαλυνθήσεται Χριστὸς ἐν τῷ σώματί μου, εἴτε διὰ ζωῆς εἴτε διὰ fulfilled my earnest longing and hope, that I may never hang back through shame, but at this crisis, as always, may speak and act courageously; so that, whether I die a martyr for His name or live to labour in His service, He may be glorified in my body.'

19. τοῦτο] 'this state of things,' these perplexities and annoyances. It is unconnected with the preceding ἐν τούτῳ, ver. 18.

σωτηρίαν] 'salvation,' in the highest sense. These trials will develop the spiritual life in the Apostle, will be a pathway to the glories of heaven. His personal safety cannot be intended here, as some have thought; for the σωτηρία, of which he speaks, will be gained equally whether he lives or dies (ver. 20).

τῆς ὑμῶν δεήσεως κ.τ.λ.] The two clauses are fitly connected by the same article; for the supply of the Spirit is the answer to their prayer.

ἐπιχορηγίας] 'bountiful supply'; see the note on Gal. iii. 5. But must the following genitive τοῦ πνεύματος be considered subjective or objective? Is the Spirit the giver or the gift? Ought we not to say in answer to this question, that the language of the original suggests no limitation, that it will bear both meanings equally well, and that therefore any such restriction is arbitrary? 'The Spirit of Jesus' is both the giver and the gift. For the expression τὸ πνεῦμα Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ compare Rom. viii. 9, Gal. iv. 6, and Acts xvi. 7 (the correct reading).

20. ἀποκαταδοκίαν] 'earnest desire.' The substantive occurs once again in the New Testament, Rom. viii. 19. The verb is not uncommon in Polybius and later writers. The idea of eagerness conveyed by the simple word καταδοκεῖν is further intensified by the preposition, which implies abstraction, absorption, as in ἀποβλέπειν, ἀπεκδέχεσθαι, etc.: comp. Joseph. B. J. iii. 7. 26 τοῖς μὲν οὖν καθ' ἕτερα προσφέρουσι τὰς κλίμακας οὐ προσείχεν, ἀπεκαδοκεί δὲ τὴν ὁρμὴν τῶν βελῶν, i. e. his attention was drawn off and concentrated on the missiles; a passage quoted by C. F. A. Fritzsche, whose account of the word however (Fritzscher Opusc. i. p. 150) is not altogether satisfactory.

αἰσχυνθήσομαι κ.τ.λ.] αἰσχύνη and παρρησία are opposed, Prov. xiii. 5 ἀσεβὴς δὲ αἰσχύνεται καὶ οὐχ ἔξει παρρησίαν, 1 Joh. ii. 28 σχῶμεν παρρησίαν καὶ μὴ αἰσχυνθῶμεν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ. This right of free speech (παρρησία) is the badge, the privilege, of the servant of Christ: see esp. 2 Cor. iii. 12.

καὶ νῦν] 'so now.' For καὶ νῦν (καὶ ἄρτι) corresponding to ὡς (καθώς) comp. 1 Joh. ii. 18, Gal. i. 9.

μεγαλυνθήσεται] After ἐν πάσῃ παρρησίᾳ the first person might naturally be expected: but with sensitive reverence the Apostle shrinks from any mention of his own agency, lest he should seem to glorify himself. It is not μεγαλυνθήσομαι, not even μεγαλυνῶ τὸν Χριστόν, but μεγαλυνθήσεται Χριστὸς ἐν τῷ σώματί μου. For the thought compare 2 Cor. iv. 10 πάντοτε τὴν νέκρωσιν τοῦ Ἰησοῦ ἐν τῷ σώματι περιφέροντες, ἵνα καὶ ἡ ζωὴ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ ἐν τῷ σώματι ἡμῶν φανερωθῇ, 1 Cor. vi. 20 δοξασάτε δὴ τὸν Θεὸν ἐν τῷ σώματι ὑμῶν.

21—26. 'Others may make choice between life and death. I gladly θανάτου. ²¹ ἐμοὶ γὰρ τὸ ζῆν Χριστὸς καὶ τὸ ἀποθανεῖν κέρδος. ²² εἰ δὲ τὸ ζῆν ἐν σαρκὶ τοῦτό μοι καρπὸς ἔργου—

accept either alternative. If I live, my life is one with Christ: if I die, my death is gain to me. Yet when I incline to prefer death, I hesitate: for may not my life—this present existence which men call life—may not my life be fruitful through my labours? Nay, I know not how to choose. I am hemmed in, as it were, a wall on this side and a wall on that. If I consulted my own longing, I should desire to dissolve this earthly tabernacle, and to go home to Christ; for this is very far better. If I consulted your interests, I should wish to live and labour still: for this your needs require. And a voice within assures me, that so it will be. I shall continue here and abide with you all; that I may promote your advance in the faith and your joy in believing: and that you on your part may have in me fresh cause for boasting in Christ, when you see me present among you once more.

21. ἐμοί] 'to me,' whatever it may be to others: so ἡμῶν, iii. 20.

τὸ ζῆν Χριστός] 'life is Christ.' 'I live only to serve Him, only to commune with Him; I have no conception of life apart from Him.' 'Quicquid vivo,' is Bengel's paraphrase, 'Christum vivo': comp. Gal. ii. 20 ζῶ δὲ οὐκέτι ἐγώ, ζῇ δὲ ἐν ἐμοὶ Χριστός, and Col. iii. 3, 4.

τὸ ἀποθανεῖν κέρδος] 'death is gain, for then my union with Christ will be more completely realised.' The tense denotes not the act of dying but the consequence of dying, the state after death: comp. 2 Cor. vii. 3 εἰς τὸ συναποθανεῖν καὶ συνζῆν, 'to be with you in death and in life.' The proper opposition to ζῆν is not ἀποθνήσκειν, but ἀποθανεῖν or τεθνάναι, e.g. Plato Leg. p. 958 E, Gorg. p. 483 B, Phæd. 62 A. The difference is marked in Plato Phæd. 64 A οὐδὲν ἄλλο ἐπιτηδεύ-ουσιν ἢ ἀποθνήσκειν τε καὶ τεθνάναι.

22. The grammar of the passage reflects the conflict of feeling in the Apostle's mind. He is tossed to and fro between the desire to labour for Christ in life, and the desire to be united with Christ by death. The abrupt and disjointed sentences express this hesitation.

εἰ δὲ τὸ ζῆν κ.τ.λ.] Of several interpretations that have been suggested, two only seem to deserve consideration: (1) 'But if my living in the flesh will be fruitful through a laborious career, then what to choose I know not.' In this case καὶ will introduce the apodosis. The only passage at all analogous in the New Testament is 2 Cor. ii. 2 εἰ γὰρ ἐγὼ λυπῶ ὑμᾶς, καὶ τίς ὁ εὐφραίνων με; comp. Clem. Hom. ii. 44 εἰ δὲ τὸ πῖον ὅρος ἐπιθυμεί, καὶ τίνας τὰ πάντα; εἰ ψεύδεται, καὶ τίς ἀληθεύει; κ.τ.λ. But the parallel is not exact, for in these instances καὶ introduces a direct interrogative. Passages indeed are given in Hartung (i. pp. 130, 131) where καὶ ushers in the apodosis after εἰ, but these are all poetical. And even if this use of καὶ be admissible, the sentence still runs awkwardly. (2) 'But if (it be my lot) to live in the flesh, then my labour will be productive of fruit. And so what to choose I know not.' Thus the sentence εἰ δὲ τὸ ζῆν κ.τ.λ. is treated as elliptical, the predicate being suppressed. But, though ellipses are very frequent in St Paul (comp. e.g. Rom. iv. 9, v. 18, ix. 16, 1 Cor. iv. 6, xi. 24, 2 Cor. i. 6, Gal. ii. 9, v. 13, etc.), yet the present instance would be extremely harsh. Of the two explanations already considered the first seems preferable; but may not a third be hazarded? (3) 'But what if my living in the flesh will bear fruit, etc.? In fact what to choose I know not.' In this case εἰ implies an interrogation, καὶ τί αἰρήσομαι οὐ γινώριζω· ²³συνέχομαι δὲ ἐκ τῶν

 δύο, τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν ἔχων εἰς τὸ ἀναλῦσαι καὶ σὺν Χρισ-

the apodosis being suppressed; as in Rom. ix. 22, Acts xxiii. 9 (where the received text adds μὴ θεωμαχῶμεν). On this and similar uses of εἰ see Winer § lvii. p. 531, § lxxv. p. 622, A. Buttmann pp. 214, 215. I do not know whether this interpretation has ever been suggested; but it seems to be in keeping with the abruptness of the context, and to present less difficulty than those generally adopted.

τὸ ζῆν ἐν σαρκί] St Paul had before spoken of the natural life as τὸ ζῆν simply; but the mention of the gain of death has meanwhile suggested the thought of the higher life. Thus the word ζῆν requires to be qualified by the addition of ἐν σαρκί. After all death is true life. The sublime guess of Euripides, τίς οἶδεν εἰ τὸ ζῆν μὲν ἐστι κατθανεῖν τὸ κατθανεῖν δὲ ζῆν, which was greeted with ignoble ridicule by the comic poets, has become an assured truth in Christ.

καρπὸς ἔργου] Comp. Rom. i. 13 ἵνα τινὰ καρπὸν σχῶ καὶ ἐν ὑμῖν. For the metaphor see 1 Cor. iii. 6 sq.

οὐ γινώριζω] 'I do not perceive.' Γινώριζω has two distinct senses; (1) 'To understand, know'; (2) 'To declare, make known.' In classical Greek the former seems to be the more common, even at a late date, though the latter occurs not infrequently. On the other hand in biblical Greek the latter is the usual meaning (e.g. below, iv. 6), the exceptions being very few, as here and Job iv. 16 (Symm.), xxxiv. 25 (LXX): comp. Test. xii Patr. Dan 2 φίλον οὐ γινώριζει.

23. συνέχομαι ἐκ τῶν δύο] 'I am hemmed in on both sides, I am prevented from inclining one way or the other.' The preposition seems to denote direction, as in ἐκ δεξιᾶς, ἐκ θαλάσσης, etc. The δύο are the two horns of the dilemma, stated in verses 21, 22.

τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν κ.τ.λ.] 'my own desire tends towards.' Comp. Gal. vi. 4.

τὸ ἀναλῦσαι] 'to break up, depart,' comp. ἀλύσεις 2 Tim. iv. 6. The metaphor is drawn from breaking up an encampment, e.g. Polyb. v. 28. 8 αὐθις εἰς παραχειμασίαν ἀνέλυσε, 2 Macc. ix. 1 ἀναλελυκὼς ἀκόσμως. The camp-life of the Israelites in the wilderness, as commemorated by the annual feast of Tabernacles, was a ready and appropriate symbol of man's transitory life on earth: while the land of promise with its settled abodes, the land flowing with milk and honey, typified the eternal inheritance of the redeemed: Hebr. iv. 1 sq. 'See especially 2 Cor. v. 1 ἐὰν ἡ ἐπίγειος ἡμῶν οἰκία τοῦ σκήνους καταλυθῇ, οἰκοδομὴν ἐκ Θεοῦ ἔχομεν, οἰκίαν ἀχειροποίητον αἰώνιον ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, and ver. 4. Compare also the metaphor in Plut. Mor. 76 D οὐ μόνας ποιοῦσιν ἡ ἐποχὰς ὥσπερ ἐν ὁδῷ τῆς προκοπῆς ἀλλ' ἀναλύσει.

σὺν Χριστῷ εἶναι] The faithful immediately after death are similarly represented as in the presence and keeping of the Lord also in 2 Cor. v. 6, 8 ἐνδημοῦντες ἐν τῷ σώματι ἐκδημοῦμεν ἀπὸ τοῦ Κυρίου κ.τ.λ., Acts vii. 59; comp. Clem. Rom. § 5 ἐπορεύθη εἰς τὸν ὀφειλόμενον τόπον τῆς δόξης of St Peter and εἰς τὸν ἅγιον τόπον ἐπορεύθη of St Paul, Polye. Phil. § 9 εἰς τὸν ὀφειλόμενον αὐτοῖς τόπον εἰσι παρὰ τῷ Κυρίῳ. On the other hand their state after death is elsewhere described as a sleep from which they will arise, 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52, 1 Thess. iv. 14, 16. The one mode of representation must be qualified by the other.

πολλῶ μᾶλλον κρείσσον] For the triple comparative see Isocr. Archid. § 83 πολλὸν γὰρ κρείττον...τελευτῆσαι τὸν βίον μᾶλλον ἢ ζῆν κ.τ.λ. and other references in Wetstein: comp. Winer § xxxv. p. 254. The insertion of γὰρ is supported by most of the best mss; and yet a reading which comes to the τῷ εἶναι· πολλὰ [γὰρ] μᾶλλον κρείσσον· ²⁴ τὸ δὲ ἐπιμένειν [ἐν] τῇ σαρκὶ ἀναγκαιότερον δι' ὑμᾶς. ²⁵ καὶ τοῦτο πεποιθὼς οἶδα, ὅτι μενῶ καὶ παραμένῳ πᾶσιν ὑμῖν εἰς τὴν ὑμῶν προκοπὴν καὶ χαρὰν τῆς πίστεως, ²⁶ ἵνα τὸ καύχημα ὑμῶν περισσεύῃ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ ἐν ἐμοὶ διὰ τῆς ἐμῆς παρουσίας πάλιν πρὸς ὑμᾶς.

relief of a disjointed syntax must be regarded with suspicion.

24. ἐπιμένειν τῇ σαρκί] not 'to abide in,' but 'to abide by the flesh,' to cling to this present life, to take it with all its inconveniences. This is the common construction of ἐπιμένειν in St Paul, Rom. vi. 1, xi. 22, 23, Col. i. 23, 1 Tim. iv. 16. The insertion of ἐν weakens the force of the expression; besides that this preposition is not found with ἐπιμένειν elsewhere in St Paul, except in 1 Cor. xvi. 8 ἐπιμένῳ ἐν Ἐφέσῳ which is no parallel.

ἀναγκαιότερον] The comparative corresponds to the foregoing κρείσσον. Either alternative is in a manner necessary, as either is advantageous. But the balance of necessity (of obligation) is on one side, the balance of advantage on the other.

25. τοῦτο πεποιθὼς οἶδα] 'of this I am confidently persuaded, that etc.'; comp. Rom. xiv. 14 οἶδα καὶ πέπεισμαι... ὅτι κ.τ.λ., and Ephes. v. 5 τοῦτο γὰρ ἵστε γινώσκοντες ὅτι πᾶς πόρνος κ.τ.λ. The words are commonly taken, 'being persuaded of this (that my life will be advantageous to you), I know that etc.'

οἶδα] not a prophetic inspiration, but a personal conviction: comp. ii. 24. The same word οἶδα is used Acts xx. 25, where he expresses his belief that he shall not see his Asiatic converts again. Viewed as infallible presentiments, the two are hardly reconcilable; for the one assumes, the other negatives, his release. The assurance here recorded was fulfilled (1 Tim. i. 3); while the presentiment there expressed was overruled by events (1 Tim. i. 3; 2 Tim. i. 15, 18, iv. 20).

παραμένῳ] is relative, while μενῶ is absolute. It denotes continuance in a certain place or with certain persons or in certain relations. Very frequently, as here, it takes a dative of the person, e.g. Plat. Apol. p. 39 E, Phaed. 115 D οὐκέτι ὑμῖν παραμένῳ, etc. The reading of the received text συμπαραμένῳ may be dismissed, as insufficiently supported. μενῶ καὶ παραμένῳ may be translated 'bide and abide.'

τῆς πίστεως] to be taken with both substantives. For χαρὰν τῆς πίστεως comp. Rom. xv. 13 πληρώσαι ὑμᾶς πάσης χαρᾶς καὶ εἰρήνης ἐν τῷ πιστεύειν. On joyfulness, as the key-note of this epistle, see the notes, i. 4, iv. 4.

26. ἵνα τὸ καύχημα κ.τ.λ.] 'that you may have more matter for boasting in me,' not 'that I may have more matter for boasting in you,' as it is sometimes taken. Either would accord with the Apostle's language elsewhere, 2 Cor. i. 14 ὅτι καύχημα ὑμῶν ἐσμέν καθάπερ καὶ ὑμεῖς ἡμῶν ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ (comp. v. 12); but the former is the simpler interpretation of the words here. The words καυχᾶσθαι, καύχῃσις, καύχημα, link this epistle with the preceding group, where they occur very abundantly (see the introduction, p. 41). In the later epistles only one instance is found, Ephes. ii. 9. On the difference between καύχημα, καύχῃσις, see the note Gal. vi. 4. ἐν] repeated. The first denotes the sphere in which their pride lives; the second the object on which it rests. Compare Col. ii. 7 περισσεύοντες ἐν αὐτῇ ἐν εὐχαριστίᾳ.

παρουσίας πάλιν] For the position of πάλιν see the note on Gal. i. 13.

The synonymes 'bishop' and 'presbyter.'

IT is a fact now generally recognized by theologians of all shades of opinion, that in the language of the New Testament the same officer in the Church is called indifferently 'bishop' (ἐπίσκοπος) and 'elder' or 'presbyter' (πρεσβύτερος). The bearing of this fact on the origin and authority of the 'episcopate,' as the term was understood later and as it is understood in the present day, will be considered in a dissertation at the end of this volume. At present it will be sufficient to establish the fact itself; but before doing so, it may be useful to trace the previous history of the two words.

Episcopus, 'bishop,' 'overseer,' was an official title among the Greeks. In Athenian language it was used especially to designate commissioners appointed to regulate a new colony or acquisition, so that the Attic 'bishop' corresponded to the Spartan 'harmost'.¹ Thus the impostor, who intrudes upon the colonists in Aristophanes (Av. 1022), says ἐπίσκοπος ἦκα δέυρο τῷ κνᾶμῳ λαχών. These officers are mentioned also in an inscription, Boeckh no. 73. The title however is not confined to Attic usage; it is the designation for instance of the inspectors whose business it was to report to the Indian kings (Arrian Ind. xii. 5); of the commissioner appointed by Mithridates to settle affairs in Ephesus (Appian Mithr. 48); of magistrates who regulated the sale of provisions under the Romans (Charisius in the Dig. l. 4. 18.); and of certain officers in Rhodes whose functions are unknown (Ross. Inscr. Graec. Ined. fasc. III. nos. 275, 276)².

In the LXX the word is common. In some places it signifies 'inspectors, and in the superintendents, taskmasters,' as 2 Kings xi. 19, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 12, 17, Is. lx. 17; in others it is a higher title, 'captains' or 'presidents,' Neh. xi. 9,

¹ Harpocration s. v. (ed. Dindorf. p. 129) quotes from Theophrastus, πολλῶ γὰρ κάλλιον κατὰ γε τὴν τοῦ δνόματος θέσιν, ὡς οἱ Λάκωνες ἄρμουςτὰς φάσκοντες εἰς τὰς πόλεις πέμπειν, οὐκ ἐπισκόπους οὐδὲ φύλακας, ὡς Ἀθηναῖοι. See also Schol. on Arist. Av. l. c. οἱ παρ' Ἀθηναίων εἰς τὰς ἐπηκόους πόλεις ἐπισκέψασθαι τὰ παρ' ἐκάστοις πεμπόμενοι ἐπίσκοποι καὶ φύλακες ἐκαλοῦντο οὗς οἱ Λάκωνες ἄρμουςτὰς ἔλεγον.

² In these instances the ἐπίσκοποι seem to hold some office in connexion with a temple. In another inscription (Ross. Inscr. Graec. Ined. fasc. II. no. 198), found at Thera, the word again occurs; Δεδόχθαι· ἀ[ποδε]ξαμένοις τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν τὸ μὲν ἀρ[γύριον] ἐγδανείσαι τοὺς ἐπισκό[πος] Δίωνα καὶ Μελεῖππον, where among other dialectic forms the accusative plural ίνος occurs. M. Wescher in an article in the Revue Archéologique, p. 246 (Avril 1866), supposes the ἐπίσκοποι here to be officers of a club or confraternity (ἐρανος or θιάσος), in which he is followed by Renan Les Apôtres p. 353. If their opinion be correct, this inscription presents a closer analogy to the Christian use of the term, than the instances given in the text. The context of the inscription however is not decisive, though this interpretation seems fairly probable: see below p. 192. There can be no reasonable doubt I imagine about the reading ἐπισκόπος; though Ross himself suggested ἐπισσόφος, because he found the word in another Theraean inscription (Boeckh no. 2448). In this latter inscription ἐπισσόφος is probably a mason's blunder for ἐπισκόπος.

The two words synonymous.

Meaning of 'bishop' in heathen writers

14, 22. Of Antiochus Epiphanes we are told that when he determined to overthrow the worship of the one true God, he 'appointed commissioners (ἐπισκόπους, bishops) over all the people,' to see that his orders were obeyed (1 Macc. i. 51: comp. Joseph. Ant. xii. 5. 4; in 2 Macc. v. 22 the word is ἐπιστάτας). The feminine ἐπισκοπή, which is not a classical word, occurs very frequently in the LXX, denoting sometimes the work, sometimes the office; of an ἐπίσκοπος. Hence it passed into the language of the New Testament and of the Christian Church.

Thus beyond the fundamental idea of inspection, which lies at the root of the word 'bishop,' its usage suggests two subsidiary notions also; (1) Responsibility to a superior power; (2) The introduction of a new order of things.

The term
presbyter or elder

The earlier history of the word presbyterus (elder, presbyter, or priest) is much more closely connected with its Christian sense. If the analogies of the 'bishop' are to be sought chiefly among heathen nations, the name and office of the 'presbyter' are essentially Jewish. Illustrations indeed might be found in almost all nations ancient or modern, in the γερονσία of Sparta for instance, in the 'senatus' of Rome, in the 'signoria' of Florence, or in the 'aldermen' of our own country and time, where the deliberative body originally took its name from the advanced age of its members. But among the chosen people we meet at every turn with presbyters or elders in Church and State from the earliest to the latest times. In the lifetime of the lawgiver, in the days of the judges, throughout the monarchy, during the captivity, after the return, and under the Roman domination, the 'elders' appear as an integral part of the governing body of the country. But it is rather in a special religious development of the office, than in these national and civil presbyteries, that we are to look for the prototype of the Christian minister. Over every Jewish synagogue, whether at home or abroad, a council of 'elders' presided¹. It was not unnatural therefore that, when the Christian synagogue took its place by the side of the Jewish, a similar organization should be adopted with such modifications as circumstances required; and thus the name familiar under the old dispensation was retained under the new.

transferred from the Synagogue to the Church.

Identity of the two in the apostolic writings

Of the identity of the 'bishop' and 'presbyter' in the language of the apostolic age, the following evidence seems conclusive.

(1) In the opening of this epistle St Paul salutes the 'bishops' and 'deacons².' Now it is incredible that he should recognise only the first

¹ See especially Vitringa de Synag. Vet. iii. 1. c. 1, p. 613 sq.

² It may be worth while correcting a mistake which runs through the critical editions of the Greek Testament. Chrysostom is quoted as reading συνεπισκόπους in one word. His editors no doubt make him read so, but of this reading there is no trace in the context. After explaining that the terms deacon, presbyter, bishop, were originally convertible (οἱ πρεσβύτεροι τὸ παλαιὸν ἐκαλοῦντο ἐπίσκοποι καὶ διάκονοι Χριστοῦ καὶ οἱ ἐπίσκοποι πρεσβύτεροι), he illustrates this by the fact that even in his own day bishops often addressed a presbyter as a fellow-presbyter, a deacon as a fellow-deacon (ὅθεν καὶ νῦν πολλοὶ συμ-πρεσβυτέρῳ ἐπίσκοποι γράφουσιν καὶ συν-διακόνῳ); but his language nowhere implies that he read συνεπισκόπους. The comment of Theodore of Mopsuestia again has been understood (see Tischendorf) as referring to and combating the reading συνεπισκόπους. This also is an error. After explaining the identity of and third order and pass over the second, though the second was absolutely essential to the existence of a church and formed the staple of its ministry. It seems therefore to follow of necessity that the 'bishops' are identical with the 'presbyters.' Whether or not the Philippian Church at this time possessed also a 'bishop' in the later sense of the term, is a question which must be reserved for the present.

(2) In the Acts (xx. 17) St Paul is represented as summoning to Miletus the 'elders' or 'presbyters' of the Church of Ephesus. Yet in addressing them immediately after he appeals to them as 'bishops' or 'overseers' of the church (xx. 28).

(3) Similarly St Peter, appealing to the 'presbyters' of the churches addressed by him, in the same breath urges them to 'fulfil the office of bishops' (ἐπισκοποῦντες) with disinterested zeal (1 Pet. v. 1, 2).

(4) Again in the First Epistle to Timothy St Paul, after describing the qualifications for the office of a 'bishop' (iii. 1—7), goes on at once to say what is required of 'deacons' (iii. 8—13). He makes no mention of presbyters. The term 'presbyter' however is not unknown to him; for having occasion in a later passage to speak of Christian ministers he calls these officers no longer 'bishops,' but 'presbyters' (v. 17—19).

(5) The same identification appears still more plainly from the Apostle's directions to Titus (i. 5—7); 'That thou shouldest set in order the things that are wanting and ordain elders in every city, as I appointed thee; if any one be blameless, the husband of one wife, having believing children who are not charged with riotousness or unruly; for a bishop (τὸν ἐπίσκοπον)¹ must be blameless etc.'²

(6) Nor is it only in the apostolic writings that this identity is found. and in Clement of bishops and presbyters Theodore adds, προσεκτέον ὅτι τὸ σὺν ἐπισκόποις λέγει, οὐχ ὡς τινες ἐνόμισαν ὥσπερ ἡμεῖς σὺν πρεσβυτέροις γράφειν εἰώθαμεν· οὐ γὰρ πρὸς τὸ ἑαυτοῦ πρόσωπον εἶπεν τὸ σὺν, ἵνα ᾗ σὺν ἐπισκόποις ἡμῶν· ἀλλὰ πρὸς τὸ πᾶσι τοῖς ἐν Φιλιπποῖς ἀγίοις, σὺν τοῖς αὐτόθι ἐπισκόποις τε καὶ διακόνοις: 'It must be observed that when he says with the bishops, it is not, as some have thought, a parallel to our practice of writing 'together with the elders' (i.e. of associating the elders with themselves in the superscription, as for instance Polycarp does in writing to the Philippians): for he does not use the word within reference to himself, meaning with our bishops, but in reference to all the saints that are at Philippi, i.e. with the bishops and deacons that are there.' Here I have substituted σὺν πρεσβυτέροις for συμπρεσβυτέροις, as the context seems to require, and corrected the corrupt ᾗ ἰσὴν into ᾗ σὺν with the Latin. The Latin version of Theodore however (Raban. Maur. vi. p. 479, ed. Migne) mistakes and confuses his meaning. The interpretation which Theodore is combating appears in the Ambrosian Hilarly; 'Cum episcopis et diaconibus: hoc est, cum Paulo et Timotheo, qui utique episcopi erant: simul significavit et diaconos qui ministrabant ei. Ad plebem enim scribit: nam si episcopis scriberet et diaconibus, ad personas eorum scriberet; et loci ipsius episcopo scribendum erat, non duobus vel tribus, sicut et ad Titum et Timotheum.' See below p. 228.

¹ In τὸν ἐπίσκοπον the definite article denotes the type, as in 2 Cor. xii. 12 τὰ σημεῖα τοῦ ἀποστόλου, Joh. x. 11 ὁ ποιμὴν ὁ καλός: see the notes on Gal. iii. 20.

² The identity of the two titles in the New Testament is recognised by the Peshito Syriac Version, which commonly translates ἐπίσκοπος by kashisho, i.e. presbyter or elder: see Wichelhaus de Vers. Syr. Ant. p. 209.

St Clement of Rome wrote probably in the last decade of the first century and in his language the terms are still convertible. Speaking of the Apostles he says that 'preaching in every country and city (κατὰ χώρας καὶ κατὰ πόλεις) they appointed their first-fruits, having tested them by the Spirit, to be bishops and deacons of them that should believe (μελλόντων πιστεύειν)' § 42. A little later, referring to the disorganized state of the Corinthian Church, he adds, 'Our Apostles knew through our Lord Jesus Christ that there would be strife concerning the authority (ἐπὶ τοῦ ὀνόματος) of the bishopric...' 'We shall incur no slight guilt if we eject from the bishopric those who have presented the offerings (δῶρα) unblameably and holily. Blessed are the presbyters who have gone before, whose departure was crowned with fruit and mature (οἷτινες ἔγκαρπον καὶ τέλειαν ἔσχον τὴν ἀνάλυσιν)' § 44.

Different usage in Ignatius
and Poly-
carp.

This is the last instance of identification. With the opening of a second century a new phraseology begins. In the genuine epistles of Ignatius the terms are used in their more modern sense. In his letter to Polycarp (§ 6) he writes: 'Give heed to the bishop, that God also may give heed to you. I am devoted (ἀντίψυχον ἐγώ) to those who are obedient to the bishop, to presbyters, to deacons (τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ, πρεσβυτέροις, διακόνοις). The bishop is always singled out by this writer, as the chief officer of the church¹. So about the same time Polycarp, writing to the Philippians, gives directions to the deacons (§ 5) and the presbyters (§ 6). He also begins his letter, 'Polycarp and the presbyters that are with him.' With this form of address may be coupled the fact that the writer is distinctly called 'bishop of Smyrna' by Ignatius (Polyc. init.).

The identity proved by Jerome.

Towards the close of the second century the original application of the term 'bishop' seems to have passed not only out of use, but almost out of memory. So perhaps we may account for the explanation which Irenæus gives of the incident at Miletus (Acts xx. 17, 28). 'Having called together the bishops and presbyters who were from Ephesus and the other neighbouring cities².' But in the fourth century, when the fathers of the Church began to examine the apostolic records with a more critical eye, they at once detected the fact. No one states it more clearly than Jerome. 'Among the ancients,' he says, 'bishops and presbyters are the same, for the one is a term of dignity, the other of age³. 'The Apostle plainly shows,' he writes in another place, 'that presbyters are the same as bishops...It is proved most clearly that bishops and presbyters are the same⁴.' Again in a third passage he says 'If any one thinks the opinion

¹ Besides the passages quoted in the text see Polyc. 5, Ephes. 2. All these passages are found in the Syriac. The shorter Greek teems with references to the bishop as chief officer of the Church, but the genuineness of this latter recension seems to me more than doubtful.

² Iren. iii. 14. 2. His explanation of the incident has been charged with dishonesty, but I know of nothing to justify such a charge. It would appear a very natural solution of a difficulty, if the writer had only an indistinct knowledge of the altered value of the term. At all events the same account has been given by writers who lived in a more critical age; e.g. Potter, Church Government c. iii. p. 118.

³ Epist. lxiix (i. p. 414 sq., ed. Vallarsi).

⁴ Epist. cxlvi (i. p. 1081) 'Quum Apostolus perspicue doceat eosdem esse presbyteros quos episcopos'... 'manifestissime comprobatur eundem esse episcopum atque presbyterum.'

that the bishops and presbyters are the same, to be not the view of the Scriptures but my own, let him study the words of the apostle to the Philippians,' and in support of his view he alleges the scriptural proofs at great length¹. But, though more full than other writers, he is hardly more explicit. Of his predecessors the Ambrosian Hilary had discerned the same truth². Of his contemporaries and successors, Chrysostom, Pelagius, Theodore of Mopsuestia, Theodoret, all acknowledge it³. Thus in every one of the extant commentaries on the epistles containing the crucial passages, whether Greek or Latin, before the close of the fifth century, this identity is affirmed. In the succeeding ages bishops and popes accept the verdict of St Jerome without question. Even late in the mediæval period, and at the era of the reformation, the justice of his criticism or the sanction of his name carries the general suffrages of theologians⁴.

and recognized by earlier and later writers.

The meaning of 'prætorium' in i. 13.

The word 'prætorium' signifies properly (1) 'The general's tent,' 'the head-quarters in a camp.' From this it gets other derived meanings: (2) 'The residence of a governor or prince,' e.g. Acts xxiii. 35 ἐν τῷ πραιτωρίῳ τοῦ Ἡρώδου (A.V. 'judgment hall'), Mark xv. 16 ἀπήγαγον αὐτὸν εἰς τὴν αὐλὴν τοῦ πραιτωρίου, Acta Thomæ § 3 πραιτώρια βασιλικά, Juv. Sat. x. 161 'sedet ad prætoria regis,' Tertull. ad Scap. § 3 'solus in prætorio suo etc.' (3) 'Any spacious villa or palace'; Juv. Sat. i. 75 'criminibus debent hortos prætoria mensas,' Sueton. Tiber. 39 'juxta Terracinam in prætorio cui speluncæ nomen erat incœnante eo' (comp. Octav. 72, Calig. 37), Epict. Diss. iii. 22. 47 οὐ πραιτωρίδιον ἀλλὰ γῆ μόνον κ.τ.λ.

So much for the word generally. It remains to enquire, what sense it would probably bear, when used by a person writing from Rome and speaking of the cause which he advocated as becoming known 'in the whole of the prætorium.' Several answers have been given to this question.

(1) 'The imperial residence on the Palatine.' So our English Version, (1) The following the Greek commentators. Thus Chrysostom, 'They still (τέως) called the palace by this name.' Similarly Theodore of Mopsuestia⁵,

¹ Ad Tit. i. 5 (vii. p. 695).

² On Ephes. iv. 11. But he is hardly consistent with himself. On 1 Tim. iii. 8 he recognises the identity less distinctly; on Phil. i. 1 (see above, p. 95, note) he ignores it; while on Tit. i. 7 he passes over the subject without a word.

³ Chrysostom on Phil. i. 1 (on 1 Tim. iii. 8, Tit. i. 7, he is not so clear); Pelagius on Phil. i. 1, 1 Tim. iii. 12, Tit. i. 7;

Theodore of Mopsuestia on Phil. i. 1, Tit. i. 7, and especially on 1 Tim. iii (where the matter is fully discussed); Theodoret on Phil. i. 1, 1 Tim. iii. 1 sq., Tit. i. 7, following closely in the steps of Theodore. See also Ammonius on Acts xx. 28 in Cramer's Catena, p. 337.

⁴ Later authorities are given in Gieseler Kirchengesch. i. pp. 105, 106.

⁵ In Raban. Maur. Op. vi. p. 482 A.

'What we are in the habit of calling the palace, he calls the prætorium.' Theodoret giving the same meaning adds, 'It is probable that the palace was so called at that time¹.' This interpretation, which has the advantage of illustrating the reference to 'Cæsar's household' at the close of the epistle, is thus ably advocated by Dean Merivale²; "In the provinces the emperor was known, not as Princeps, but as Imperator. In Judæa governed more immediately by him through the imperial procurators, he would be more exclusively regarded as a military chief. The soldier, to whom the Apostle was attached with a chain, would speak of him as his general. When Paul asked the centurion in charge of him, 'Where shall I be confined at Rome?', the answer would be, 'In the prætorium' or the quarters of the general. When led, as perhaps he was, before the emperor's tribunal, if he asked the attending guard, 'Where am I?', again they would reply, 'In the prætorium.' The emperor was protected in his palace by a body-guard, lodged in its courts and standing sentry at its gates; and accordingly they received the name of prætorians."

Objection
to this meaning.

It is hardly probable however that in the early ages of the empire the feelings of Roman citizens would be thus outraged by the adoption of a term which implied that they were under a military despotism. In the days of the republic the consuls were required to lay down their 'imperium' without the walls and to appear in the city as civilians. And under the early Cæsars the fiction of the republic was carefully guarded, though the reality had ceased to exist. If it be urged that the name was confined to the soldiers (as Dean Merivale seems to suggest), it is difficult to conceive why St Paul after several months' residence at least in Rome, during which he must have mixed with various classes of men, should have singled out this exceptional term, especially when writing to distant correspondents.

No instance of this sense.

But whatever may be said of the a priori probability, it is a fatal objection that not a single instance of this usage has been produced. The language of the Greek fathers quoted above shows that though they assumed the word must have had this meaning at an earlier date, it was certainly not so when they wrote. While 'prætorium' is a frequent designation of splendid villas, whether of the emperors or others, away from Rome, the imperial residence on the Palatine is not once so called³. Indeed the word seems to have suggested to a Roman the idea of a country seat. Thus when Tacitus and Suetonius are relating the same event, the one uses 'villa,' the other 'prætorium,' to describe the scene of the occurrence⁴. Hence Forcellini with right appreciation defines the word, 'ædes elegantiores ornatioresque in agris exstructæ et villa quæque

¹ His words are τὰ βασιλεια γὰρ πραιτώριον προσηγόρευσεν' εἰκὸς δὲ ὅτι καὶ οὕτως κατ' ἐκείνον ὀνομάζετο τὸν καιρὸν' ἀρχὴν γὰρ εἶχεν ἡ ῥωμαϊκὴ δυναστεία.

² History of the Romans vi. p. 268.

³ In Phlegon de Longæv. § 4 ἐκ Σαβίνων ἀπὸ πραιτωρίου παλλαντιανοῦ, a palace of the emperor in the Sabine territory is meant. Παλλαντιανὸς here is explained 'imperial' 'Cæsarean' by Perizonius de Prætor. p. 252, as if connected with παλάτιον (comp. Dion Cass. liii. 16 quoted above in the text); but, like horti Pallantiani, the name is doubtless derived from its former owner Pallas; see Friedländer Sittengesch. Roms i. p. 98.

⁴ Tac. Ann. iv. 59, Suet. Tiber. 39.

minime rustica vel villæ pars nobilior et cultior ubi domini, rusticari cum libet, morantur.' In Rome itself a 'prætorium' would not have been tolerated¹.

(2) The 'prætorium' is not the imperial palace itself, but the prætorian barracks attached thereto. This interpretation is open to many of the objections urged against the former. Moreover it is equally destitute of authority. In a passage of Dion Cassius indeed (liii. 16) there seems to be mention of a 'prætorium' on the Palatine; καλεῖται δὲ τὰ βασιλεία παλάτιον... ὅτι ἐν τῇ παλατίῳ ὁ Καῖσαρ ὥκει καὶ ἐκεῖ τὸ στρατήγιον εἶχε. Here στρατήγιον is doubtless a rendering of the Latin 'prætorium'; but the sense is hardly local. As this passage stands alone, the words would appear to mean simply that the emperor was surrounded by his bodyguards and kept state as a military commander. This language, though it would probably have been avoided by a contemporary, was not in itself inappropriate when applied to Augustus, of whom Dion is speaking, before the prætorian camp was built, and when the barracks attached to the palace were still the head-quarters of the prætorian guards². At all events, if 'prætorium' ever had this sense, it can hardly have been meant by St Paul here; for the expression 'throughout the prætorium,' in connexion with the context, would be wholly out of place in reference to a space so limited.

(3) The great camp of the prætorian soldiers is so designated. Tibertius concentrated the cohorts previously scattered up and down the city (Tac. Ann. iv. 2) and established them outside the Colline gate at the North East of the city in a permanent camp, whose ramparts can be traced at the present day, being embedded in the later walls of Aurelian. If 'prætorium' here has a local sense, no other place could be so fitly designated; for as this camp was without the walls, the term so applied would give no offence. But this meaning again lacks external support. It might indeed be argued that as the Greek equivalent to 'præfectus prætorio' is στρατοπεδάρχης, 'the commander of the camp,' the camp itself would be designated 'prætorium'; but, as a question of fact, no decisive instance of this sense is produced. The camp is sometimes called 'castra prætoria' (Plin. N. H. iii. 9), sometimes 'castra prætorianorum' (Tac. Hist. i. 3), once at least 'castra prætori' (i.e. prætorii, Orell. Inscr. 21); but never 'prætorium.'

As all attempts to give a local sense to 'prætorium' thus fail for want of evidence, it remains to discover some other suitable meaning, which is not open to this objection.

(4) Prætorium signifies not a place, but a body of men. It is used for instance of a council of war, the officers who met in the general's tent: e.g. liv. xxvi. 15, xxx. 5. But more frequently it denotes the prætorian

¹ On the other hand away from Rome the residence of the emperor's representative is frequently so called; e.g. at Cologne (Orell. 3297), at Munda (ib. 3303).

² See Perizonius p. 230. It must be remembered that Dion Cassius wrote about two centuries after the event. For this sense of στρατήγιον comp. Tac. Ann. iii. 33 'duorum egressus coli, duo esse prætoria,' where a complaint is made of the pomp maintained by the wives of provincial governors.

regiments, the imperial guards. This in fact is the common use of the term. It is found in 'castra praetorii' already quoted and probably also in 'praefectus praetorio.' It occurs also in such phrases as 'veteranus ex praetorio' (Tac. Hist. ii. 11, Suet. Nero 9, Orell. Inscr. 123), 'missus ex praetorio' (Orell. no. 1644, note), 'lectus in praetorio' (Orell. no. 941; comp. nos. 3589, 6806, 6817). A guardsman was said to serve 'in praetorio,' a soldier of the line 'in legione' (Orell. nos. 3547, 5286, 5291). If St Paul seeing a new face among his guards asked how he came to be there, the answer would be 'I have been promoted to the praetorium'; if he enquired after an old face which he missed, he might be told 'He has been discharged from the praetorium.' In this sense and this alone can it be safely affirmed that he would hear the word 'praetorium' used daily. The following passages will further illustrate this meaning: Plin. N. H. xxv. 2 'Nuper cujusdam militantis in praetorio mater vidit in quiete...in Laecania res gerebatur, Hispaniae proxima parte': Tac. Hist. i. 20 'Exauctorati per eos dies tribuni, e praetorio Antonius Taurus et Antonius Naso, ex urbanis cohortibus Aemilius Pacensis, e vigiliis Julius Fronto'; ib. iv. 46 'Militiam et stipendia orant...igitur in praetorium accepti': Joseph. Ant. xix. 3. $\text{Ἡ οἱ περὶ τὸ στρατηγικὸν καλούμενον ὅπερ ἐστὶ τῆς στρατῆος καθαρὸν-τατον, i.e. 'the praetorium, which is the flower of the army':$ Dosithe. Hadri. Sent. § 2 αἰτοῦντός τινος ἵνα στρατεύηται, Ἀδριανὸς εἶπεν Ποῦ θέλεις στρατεύεσθαι; ἐκείνου λέγοντος Εἰς τὸ πραιτώριον, Ἀδριανὸς ἐξήτασεν Ποῖον μῆκος ἔχεις; λέγοντος ἐκείνου Πέντε πόδας καὶ ἥμισυ, Ἀδριανὸς εἶπεν Ἐν τοσούτῳ εἰς τὴν πολιτικὴν στρατεύου, καὶ ἐὰν καλὸς στρατιώτης ἔσῃ τρίτῳ ὀφυνίῳ δυνήσῃ εἰς τὸ πραιτώριον μεταβῆναι¹.

This sense
to be adopted.

This sense is in all respects appropriate. It forms a fit introduction to the words καὶ τοῖς λοιποῖς πᾶσι which follow. It is explained by St Paul's position as an imperial prisoner in charge of the prefect of the praetorians. And lastly it avoids any conflict with St Luke's statement that the Apostle dwelt in 'his own hired house': for it is silent about the locality.

¹ See also Plin. N. H. vii. 19, Orell. no. 3477. On the meaning of the word praetorium see especially 'Perizonium Hubero Disquisitio de Pratorio, etc. (Franeq. 1690)', a 12mo volume containing more than 900 pages. An independent though partial search has enabled me to add very little to the matter accumulated in this elaborate work. Huber maintained that by 'praetorium' in Phil. i. 13 must be understood the palace or the audience-chamber therein. Perizonius, whose refutation of his adversary is complete, explained it of the praetorian cohorts or the praetorian camp. If he had omitted this second alternative, his work would in my judgment have been entirely satisfactory: though I must confess to having once taken it to mean the camp; Journal of Class.

and Sacr. Phil. no. x. p. 58. Almost all recent commentators on the Philippians occupy themselves in discussing the possible local senses of 'praetorium,' barely, if at all, alluding to the only meaning which is really well supported and meets all the requirements of the case. Of recent writers on St Paul two only, so far as I have noticed, Bleek (Einkl. in das N. T. p. 433) and apparently Ewald (Sendschreiben etc. p. 441), take what seems to be the correct view, but even they do not explain their reasons. On this account I have entered into the question more fully than its absolute importance deserves.

² This difficulty indeed is very slight, if it be interpreted of the camp; for the camp was large and might perhaps have contained houses or rooms rented by

The following account, relating to a contemporary of St Paul, who also spent some time in Rome under military custody, is abridged from Josephus (Ant. xviii. 6. 5 sq.). As throwing light on the condition of a prisoner under such circumstances, it may fitly close this investigation.

Herod Agrippa, then a young man and resident in Rome, contracted an intimate friendship with Caius. On one occasion, when the two were driving together, Agrippa was overheard praying that Tiberius would resign the empire to make way for his friend who was 'in all respects more worthy.' Some time after, the charioteer, having been dismissed by Agrippa and bearing a grudge against him, reported his words to Tiberius. So Agrippa was consigned to Macro, the prefect of the prætorians, to be put in chains. Hereupon Antonia, the sister-in-law of Tiberius, who had a kindly feeling for the Jewish prince as a friend of her grandson Caius, grieving at his misfortune, and yet not daring to intercede with the prisoners: see above, p. 9 sq. But if the palace or the Palatine barracks were meant, St Luke's statement would not be so easily explained. Wieseler indeed (Chronol. p. 403, note 3), who pronounces in favour of the Palatine barracks, adduces the instances of Drusus and Agrippa in support of his view. But both cases break down on examination. (1) Drusus, it is true, was imprisoned in the palace; Tac. Ann. vi. 23, Suet. Tiber. 54. But this is no parallel to the case of St Paul. Drusus, as a member of the imperial family, would naturally be confined within the precincts of the imperial residence. Moreover, as Tiberius had designs on his nephew's life, secrecy was absolutely necessary for his plans. Nor indeed could one, who might at any moment become the focus of a revolution, be safely entrusted to the keeping of the camp away from the emperor's personal cognisance. (2) Wieseler misunderstands the incidents relating to Agrippa, whose imprisonment is wholly unconnected with the Palatine. When Tiberius ordered him to be put under arrest, he was at the emperor's Tusculan villa (§ 6). From thence he was conveyed to the camp, where we find him still confined at the accession of Caius, which led to his removal and release (§ 10). Wieseler's mistake is twofold. First, he explains τοῦ βασιλείου as referring to the palace at Rome; though Josephus lays the scene of the arrest at Tusculanum (Τιβέριος ἐκ τῶν Καπρεῶν εἰς Τουσουλανὸν παραγλυνεται). For the existence of such palaces at Tusculum see Strabo v. p. 239 δεχόμενος βασιλείων κατασκευὰς ἐκπρεπεστάτας. Secondly, he boldly translates στρατόπεδον by 'prætorium,' understanding thereby the Palatine barracks; though these barracks were in no sense a camp and were never so called. Building upon these two false suppositions, he makes the Palatine the scene of both his arrest and his imprisonment. Caractacus also, like Agrippa, appears to have been imprisoned in the prætorian camp, Tac. Ann. xii. 36. And, if these royal captives were not retained on the Palatine, it is very improbable that an exception should be made in the case of a humble prisoner like St Paul, whose case would not appear to differ from many hundreds likewise awaiting the decision of Cæsar.

His confinement.

It will appear from the account relating to Agrippa, given in the text, that this prince was confined in the camp during the reign of Tiberius; but that on the accession of Caius he was removed to a house of his own, though still under military custody. The notices in the Acts suggest that St Paul's captivity resembled this latter condition of Agrippa, and that he did not reside actually within the camp. A Roman tradition is perhaps preserved in the notice of the Roman Hilary (Ambrosiaster) in his prologue to the Ephesians; 'In custodia sub fidejussore intelligitur degisse manens extra castra in conductu suo.' In Acts xxviii. 16 some MSS (Greek and Latin) read ἐξω τῆς παρεμβολῆς, 'extra castra.'

emperor, spoke to Macro on his behalf. Her entreaties prevailed. The prefect took care that the soldiers appointed to guard him should not be over severe, and that the centurion to whom he was bound should be a man of humane disposition. He was permitted to take a bath every day; free access was granted to his freedmen and his friends; and other indulgences were allowed him. Accordingly his friend Silas and his freedmen, Marsyas and Stœcheus, were constant in their attendance: they brought him food that was palatable to him; they smuggled in clothes under pretence of selling them; they made his bed every night with the aid of the soldiers, who had received orders to this effect from Macro.

Death of Tiberius.

In this way six months rolled by and Tiberius died. On hearing of the emperor's death, Marsyas ran in hot haste to Agrippa to tell him the good news. He found the prince on the threshold, going out to the baths, and making signs to him said in Hebrew, 'The lion's dead.' The centurion in command noticed the hurry of the messenger and the satisfaction with which his words were received. His curiosity was excited. At first an evasive answer was returned to his question; but as the man had been friendly disposed, Agrippa at length told him. The centurion shared his prisoner's joy, unfastened his chain, and served up dinner to him. But while they sat at table, and the wine was flowing freely, contrary tidings arrived. Tiberius was alive and would return to Rome in a few days. The centurion who had committed himself so grievously was furious at this announcement. He rudely pushed Agrippa off the couch, and threatened him with the loss of his head, as a penalty for his lying report. Agrippa was again put in chains, and the rigour of his confinement increased. So he passed the night in great discomfort. But the next day the report of the emperor's death was confirmed. And soon after a letter arrived from Caius to Piso the prefect of the city, directing the removal of Agrippa from the camp to the house where he had lived before he was imprisoned.

Release of Agrippa.

This relieved and reassured him. Though he was still guarded and watched, yet less restraint was put upon his movements (φυλακή μὲν καὶ τήρησις ἦν, μετὰ μέντοι ἀνέσεως τῆς εἰς τὴν διαίταν). When the new emperor arrived in Rome, his first impulse was to release Agrippa at once: but Antonia represented to him that this indecent haste would be regarded as an outrage on his predecessor's memory. So after waiting a few days to save appearances, he sent for Agrippa, placed the royal diadem on his head, gave him the tetrarchies of Philip and Lysanias, and removing his iron fetter (ἀλύσει) invested him with a golden chain of the same weight.

²⁷ Μόνον ἀξίως τοῦ εὐαγγελίου τοῦ Χριστοῦ πολιτεύεσθε, ἵνα εἴτε ἐλθὼν καὶ ἰδὼν ὑμᾶς εἴτε ἀπὼν ἀκούω τὰ περὶ ὑμῶν ὅτι στήκετε ἐν ἐνὶ πνεύματι, μιᾷ ψυχῇ

27. ἀπὼν ἀκούσω τὰ περὶ ὑμῶν.

27—30. 'But under all circumstances do your duty as good citizens of a heavenly kingdom; act worthily of the Gospel of Christ. So that whether I come among you and see with my own eyes, or stay away and obtain tidings from others, I may learn that you maintain your ground bravely and resolutely, acting by one inspiration; that with united aims and interests you are fighting all in the ranks of the Faith on the side of the Gospel; and that no assault of your antagonists makes you waver: for this will be a sure omen to them of utter defeat, to you of life and safety: an omen, I say, sent by God Himself; for it is His grace, His privilege bestowed upon you, that for Christ—yea, that ye should not only believe on Him, but also should suffer for Him. For ye have entered the same lists, ye are engaged in the same struggle, in which you saw me contending then at Philippi, in which you hear of my contending now in Rome.'

27. Μόνον] 'Only,' i.e. 'whatever may happen, whether I visit you again or visit you not': see Gal. ii. 10, v. 13, vi. 12, 2 Thess. ii. 7.

πολιτεύεσθε] 'perform your duties as citizens.' The metaphor of the heavenly citizenship occurs again, iii. 20 ἡμῶν τὸ πολίτευμα ἐν οὐρανοῖς ὑπάرخει, and Ephes. ii. 19 συνπολιτίζονται τῶν ἀγίων. See the note on iii. 20. It was natural that, dwelling in the metropolis of the empire, St Paul should use this illustration. The metaphor moreover would speak forcibly to his correspondents; for Philippi was a Roman colony, and the Apostle had himself obtained satisfaction, while in this place, by declaring himself a Roman citizen: Acts xvi. 12, 37, 38. Though the word πολιτεύεσθαι is used very loosely at a later date, at this time it seems always to refer to public duties devolving on a man as a member of a body: so Acts xxiii. 1 πάσῃ συνειδήσει ἀγαθῇ πεπολιτεύμαι τῷ Θεῷ κ.τ.λ., where St Paul had been accused of violating the laws and customs of the people and so subverting the theocratic constitution; Joseph. Vit. § 2 ἡρξάμην πολιτεύεσθαι τῇ Φαρισαίων ἀίρεσει κατὰκολουθῶν, for the Pharisees were a political as well as a religious party. The opposite to πολιτεύεσθαι is ἰδιωτεύειν, e.g. Æschin. Timarch. p. 27.

The phrase ἀξίως πολιτεύεσθαι is adopted in Clem. Rom. § 21. Polycarp also, writing to these same Philippians (§ 5), combines it very happily with another expression in St Paul (2 Tim. ii. 12), ἐὰν πολιτευσώμεθα ἀξίως αὐτοῦ, καὶ συμβασιλεύσομεν αὐτῷ, 'If we perform our duties under Him as simple citizens, He will promote us to a share of His sovereignty.'

ἵνα εἴτε ἐλθὼν κ.τ.λ.] The sentence is somewhat irregular. It would have run more smoothly ἵνα, εἴτε ἐλθὼν καὶ ἰδὼν, εἴτε ἀπὼν καὶ ἀκούων, μάθω τὰ περὶ ὑμῶν. For εἴτε, εἴτε, with participles, comp. e.g. 2 Cor. v. 9 εἴτε ἐνδημοῦντες εἴτε ἐκδημοῦντες. On this plan the sentence is begun: but in the second clause the symmetry is lost and the participle (ἀκούων) exchanged for a finite verb (ἀκούω), so that in place of a general word applying to both participial clauses (e.g. μάθω) is substituted a special one (ἀκούω) referring to the second clause only.

στήκετε] 'stand firm,' 'hold your ground.' For the metaphor see Ephes. vi. 13 ἵνα δυνήθῃτε ἀντιστῆναι ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ πονηρᾷ, καὶ ἅπαντα κατεργασάμενοι στῆναι. στήτε οὖν, περιζώσα-συναθλούντες τῇ πίστει τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, ²⁸ καὶ μὴ πτυρόμενοι ἐν μηδενὶ ὑπὸ τῶν ἀντικειμένων· ἥτις ἐστὶν αὐτοῖς ἔνδειξις ἀπωλείας, ὑμῶν δὲ σωτηρίας, καὶ τοῦτο ἀπὸ Θεοῦ. ²⁹ ὅτι ὑμῖν ἐχαρίσθη τὸ ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ, οὐ μενοι κ.τ.λ. In the form στήκω the idea of firmness or uprightness is prominent: see the note on Gal. v. 1.

In a later passage the Apostle compares the Christian life to the Greek stadium (iii. 14). Here the metaphor seems to be drawn rather from the combats of the Roman amphitheatre. Like criminals or captives, the believers are condemned to fight for their lives: against them are arrayed the ranks of worldliness and sin: only unflinching courage and steady combination can win the victory against such odds: comp. 1 Cor. iv. 9 ὁ Θεὸς ἡμᾶς τοὺς ἰσχυροὺς ἐσχάτους ἀπέδειξεν ὡς ἐπιθανάτιους, ὅτι θέατρον ἐγενήθημεν τῷ κόσμῳ κ.τ.λ.

ἐν πνεύματι] differs from μιᾷ ψυχῇ. The spirit, the principle of the higher life, is distinguished from the soul, the seat of the affections, passions, etc. For this distinction of πνεῦμα and ψυχὴ see the notes on 1 Thess. v. 23. For ἐν πνεύμα comp. Ephes. iv. 4, Clem. Rom. 46, Hermas Sim. ix. 13.

συναθλούντες τῇ πίστει] ‘striving in concert with the faith.’ Comp. Mart. Ign. § 3 παρεκάλει συναθλεῖν τῇ αὐτοῦ προθέσει, Ignat. Polyc. § 6 συγκοπιᾶτε ἀλλήλοις, συναθλεῖτε. Thus ἡ πίστις is here objective, ‘the faith,’ ‘the teaching of the Gospel’; see the notes on Gal. iii. 23. For this idea of association with the faith, thus personified and regarded as a moral agent, compare 1 Cor. xiii. 6 συγχάριε δὲ τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, 2 Tim. i. 8 συγκακοπάθησον τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ, 3 Joh. 8 συνεργοὶ γινώμεθα τῇ ἀληθείᾳ. The other construction, which detaches τῇ πίστει from the preposition in συναθλούντες and translates it ‘for the faith,’ seems harsh and improbable.

28. μὴ πτυρόμενοι] ‘not blenching,

‘not startled’: comp. Clem. Hom. ii. 39 πύρραντες ἀμαθείς ὄχλους, M. Anton. viii. 45, Polyer. in Euseb. H. E. v. 24. The metaphor is from a timid horse (πτοεῖν); comp. Plut. Mor. p. 800 οὐ μήτε ὄψει μήτε φωνῇ πτυρόμενος ὥσπερ θηρίον ὑποπτον, Vit. Fab. 3 ἐντρόμον τοῦ ἵππου γενομένου καὶ πτυρέντος. Though apparently not an Attic word, it seems to have been used in other dialects from the earliest times, e.g. Hippocr. de Morb. Mul. i. p. 600 ἢ δεδίσσεται καὶ πτόρηται.

ἥτις] ‘seeing that it,’ i.e. ‘your fearlessness when menaced with persecution’; by attraction with ἔνδειξις: comp. Ephes. iii. 13 αἰτοῦμαι μὴ ἐγκακῆν ἐν ταῖς θλίψεσιν μου ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν ἥτις ἐστὶν δόξα ὑμῶν, and see Winer § xxiv. p. 179. St Paul uses very similar language in writing to the other great church of Macedonia, 2 Thess. i. 47.

In this sentence the received text presents two variations: (1) For ἐστὶν αὐτοῖς it reads αὐτοῖς μὲν ἐστὶν: (2) For ὑμῶν it has ὑμῖν. These are obviously corrections for the sake of balancing the clauses and bringing out the contrast.

τοῦτο ἀπὸ Θεοῦ] referring to ἔνδειξις. It is a direct indication from God. The Christian gladiator does not anxiously await the signal of life or death from the fickle crowd (Juv. Sat. iii. 36 ‘Munera nunc edunt et verso pollice vulgi quem libet occidunt populariter’). The great ἀγωνοθέτης Himself has given him a sure token of deliverance.

29. ἐχαρίσθη] ‘God has granted you the high privilege of suffering for Christ; this is the surest sign, that He looks upon you with favour.’ See the note on i. 7.

τὸ ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ] i.e. πάσχειν. The μόνον τὸ εἰς αὐτὸν πιστεύειν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ ὑπὲρ αὐτοῦ πάσχειν. ³⁰ τὸν αὐτὸν ἀγῶνα ἔχοντες οἷον εἶδετε ἐν ἐμοί καὶ νῦν ἀκούετε ἐν ἐμοί.

II. ¹ Εἴ τις οὖν παράκλησις ἐν Χριστῷ, εἴ τι παραsentence is suspended by the insertion of the after-thought οὐ μόνον τὸ εἰς αὐτὸν πιστεύειν, and resumed in τὸ ὑπὲρ αὐτοῦ πάσχειν.

30. ἀγῶνα] 'a gladiatorial or athletic contest,' as 1 Tim. vi. 12, 2 Tim. iv. 7; compare συναθλοῦντες, ver. 27.

ἔχοντες] It is difficult to say whether this word should be taken (1) with στήκετε συναθλοῦντες καὶ μὴ πτυρόμενοι, the intermediate words being a parenthesis; or (2) with ὑμῖν ἐχαρίσθη κ.τ.λ. as an irregular nominative, of which many instances occur in St Paul, e.g. Col. iii. 16, Ephes. iii. 18, iv. 2: see Winer § lxiii. p. 594. As στήκετε is so far distant, the latter construction seems more probable.

εἶδετε] 'ye saw'; for the Apostle suffered persecution at Philippi itself; see Acts xvi. 19 sq., 1 Thess. ii. 2, in which latter passage he uses the same word as here, ἐν πολλῷ ἀγῶνι. See the introduction, pp. 57, 59.

II. 1. 'If then your experiences in Christ appeal to you with any force, if love exerts any persuasive power upon you, if your fellowship in the Spirit is a living reality, if you have any affectionate yearnings of heart, any tender feelings of compassion, listen and obey. You have given me joy hitherto. Now fill my cup of gladness to overflowing. Live in unity among yourselves, animated by an equal and mutual love, knit together in all your sympathies and affections, united in all your thoughts and aims. Do nothing to promote the ends of party faction, nothing to gratify your own personal vanity: but be humble-minded and esteem your neighbours more highly than yourselves. Let not every man regard his own wants, his own interests; but let him consult also the interests and the wants of others.'

The Apostle here appeals to the Philippians, by all their deepest experiences as Christians and all their noblest impulses as men, to preserve peace and concord. Of the four grounds of appeal, the first and third (παράκλησις ἐν Χριστῷ, κοινωνία πνεύματος) are objective, the external principles of love and harmony; while the second and fourth (παράμυθιον ἀγάπης, σπλάγχνα καὶ οἰκτιρμοί) are subjective, the inward feelings inspired thereby. The form of the appeal has been illustrated from Virgil Æn. i. 603 'Si quapios respectant numina, si quid usquam justitiæ est, et mens sibi conscia recti, etc.'

παράκλησις ἐν Χριστῷ] i.e. 'If your life in Christ, your knowledge of Christ, speaks to your hearts with a persuasive eloquence.' The subject of the sentence, the exhortation to unity, requires that παράκλησις should be taken here to mean not 'consolation' but 'exhortation.' See the next note.

παράμυθιον] 'incentive, encouragement,' not 'comfort,' as the word more commonly means. For this sense of παράμυθιον, 'a motive of persuasion or dissuasion,' see Plat. Legg. vi. p. 773 E, ix. p. 880 A ἐὰν μὲν τις τοιούτοις παραμυθίοις εὐπειθὲς γίγνηται, εὐήμιος ἂν εἴη, Euthyd. p. 272 B. This, which is the original meaning of the word, appears still more frequently in παραμυθία, παραμυθεῖσθαι. For the conjunction of παράκλησις, παράμυθιον, in the sense in which they are here used, see 1 Thess. ii. 11 παρακαλοῦντες ὑμᾶς καὶ παραμυθούμενοι καὶ μαρτυρόμενοι (with the note), and perhaps 1 Cor. xiv. 3.

εἴ τις κοινωνία κ.τ.λ.] 'If communion with the Spirit of love is not a mere idle name, but a real thing.' Comμύθιον ἀγάπης, εἴ τις κοινωνία πνεύματος, εἴ τις σπλάγχνα καὶ οἰκτιρμοί, ² πληρώσατέ μου τὴν χαράν, ἵνα τὸ αὐτὸ φρονῆτε, τὴν αὐτὴν ἀγάπην ἔχοντες, σύνψυχοι, τὸ ἐν φρονούντες. ³ μηδὲν κατ' ἐριθείαν μηδὲ κατὰ κενοpare the benediction in 2 Cor. xiii. 13.

εἴ τις σπλάγχνα κ.τ.λ.] The ancient copies are unanimous in favour of this reading (the only important exception being Clem. Alex. Strom. vi. p. 604 Potter, where τινα is perhaps a later correction); and we cannot therefore look upon τινα as anything more than an arbitrary, though very obvious, emendation in the later MSS where it occurs. Nevertheless it seems hardly possible that St Paul could have intended so to write. If τις is retained, it can only be explained by the eager impetuosity with which the Apostle dictated the letter, the εἴ τις of the preceding clause being repeated, and then by a sudden impulse σπλάγχνα καὶ οἰκτιρμοί being substituted for some possible masculine or feminine substantive. Some few MSS of no great authority read in like manner εἴ τις παραμύθιον. But it seems more probable that εἴ τις is an error of some early transcriber, perhaps of the original amanuensis himself, for εἴ τινα or εἴ τι. If εἴ τι were intended, the error would be nothing more than an accidental repetition of the first letter in σπλάγχνα. Under any circumstances, the reading εἴ τις is a valuable testimony to the scrupulous fidelity of the early transcribers, who copied the text as they found it, even when it contained readings so manifestly difficult. See the note on ἦλθεν in Gal. ii. 12.

σπλάγχνα] See the note on i. 8. By σπλάγχνα is signified the abode of tender feelings, by οἰκτιρμοί the manifestation of these in compassionate yearnings and actions: comp. Col. iii. 12 σπλάγχνα οἰκτιρμοῦ.

2. πληρώσατε] 'complete, as you have begun.' He has already expressed his joy at their faith and love, i. 4, 9. Compare Joh. iii. 29 αὕτη οὖν ἡ χαρὰ ἣ ἐμὴ πεπλήρωται.

ἵνα] 'so as to,' see the note on i. 9.

τὸ αὐτὸ φρονῆτε] a general expression of accordance, which is defined and enforced by the three following clauses. It is the concord not of a common hatred, but of a common love (τὴν αὐτὴν ἀγάπην ἔχοντες). It manifests itself in a complete harmony of the feelings and affections (σύνψυχοι). It produces an entire union of thought and directs it to one end (τὸ ἐν φρονούντες). The redundancy of expression is a measure of the Apostle's earnestness: βαβαί, says Chrysostom, ποσάκις τὸ αὐτὸ λέγει ἀπὸ διαθέσεως πολλῆς. See the introduction, p. 66.

τὸ ἐν φρονούντες] a stronger expression than the foregoing τὸ αὐτὸ φρονῆτε, from which it does not otherwise differ. The two are sometimes combined, e.g. Aristid. de Conc. Rhod. p. 569, ἐν καὶ ταυτὸν φρονούντες, comp. Polyb. v. 104 ὁ λέγωντες ἐν καὶ ταυτὸ πάντες καὶ συμπλέκοντες τὰς χεῖρας, quoted by Wetstein. So too the Latin 'unum atque idem senti v.' The definite article before ἐν gives additional strength to the expression.

3. μηδέν] 'do nothing.' The verb is suppressed, as is very frequently the case in imperative sentences after μή, e.g. Gal. v. 13 (see the note there): comp. Klotz on Devar. ii. p. 669. This construction is more natural and more forcible than the understanding φρονούντες with μηδέν from the preceding clause.

κατ' ἐριθείαν] So Ignat. Philad. 8 μηδὲν κατ' ἐριθείαν πράσσειν. See the introduction, p. 74. On the meaning of ἐριθεία, 'factiousness, party-spirit,' see the note on Gal. v. 20. The two δοξίαν, ἀλλὰ τῇ ταπεινοφροσύνῃ ἀλλήλους ἡγούμενοι ὑπερέχοντας ἑαυτῶν, ⁴μὴ τὰ ἑαυτῶν ἕκαστοι σκοποῦντες, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰ ἐτέρων ἕκαστοι.

4, 5. μὴ τὰ ἑαυτῶν ἕκαστος σκοποῦντες ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰ ἐτέρων. "Ἐκαστοι τοῦτο φρονεῖτε κ.τ.λ.

impediments to an universal, diffusive, unconditional charity are the exaltation of party and the exaltation of self. Both these are condemned here; the first in κατ' ἐρίθειαν, the second in κατὰ κενοδοξίαν. The μὴδὲ κατὰ κενοδοξίαν of the older mss distinguishes and emphasizes the two false motives more strongly than the ἡ κενοδοξίαν of the received text.

κενοδοξίαν] 'vain-glory, personal vanity.' See the note on Gal. v. 26.

τῇ ταπεινοφροσύνῃ] 'your lowliness of mind.' Though a common word in the New Testament, ταπεινοφροσύνη seems not to occur earlier. Even the adjective ταπεινόφρων and the verb ταπεινοφρονεῖν, though occurring once each in the LXX (Prov. xxix. 23, Ps. cxxx. 2), appear not to be found in classical Greek before the Christian era. In heathen writers indeed ταπεινός has almost always a bad meaning, 'grovelling,' 'abject.' In Aristotle (?) for instance (Eth. Eudem. iii. 3) ταπεινός is associated with ἀνδραποδώδης; in Plato (Legg. iv. p. 774 c) with ἀνελείθερος; in Arrian (Epict. i. 3) with ἀγεννής. To this however some few exceptions are found, especially in Plato and the Platonists; see Neander Church Hist. i. p. 26 (Eng. Tr.). On the other hand, St Paul once uses ταπεινοφροσύνη in disparagement, Col. ii. 18. It was one great result of the life of Christ (on which St Paul dwells here) to raise 'humility' to its proper level; and, if not fresh coined for this purpose, the word ταπεινοφροσύνη now first became current through the influence of Christian ethics. On its moral and religious significance see Neander Planting i. p. 483 (Eng. Tr.).

ἀλλήλους κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'each thinking the other better.' See esp. Rom. xii. 10 τῇ τιμῇ ἀλλήλους προηγούμενοι.

4, 5. These verses exhibit several various readings. The received text has σκοπεῖτε for σκοποῦντες, and φρονεῖσθω for φρονεῖτε, also inserting γάρ after τοῦτο. All these variations may be at once dismissed, as they have not sufficient support and are evident alterations to relieve the grammar of the sentence. But others still remain, where it is more difficult to decide. In ver. 4, at the first occurrence of the word, there is about equal authority for ἕκαστος and ἕκαστοι; at its second occurrence, the weight of evidence is very decidedly in favour of ἕκαστοι as against ἕκαστος. On the grammar it should be remarked; (1) That the plural of ἕκαστος, though common elsewhere, does not occur again either in the New Testament (for in Rev. vi. 11 it is certainly a false reading) or, as would appear, in the LXX. (2) That we should expect either τὰ ἑαυτῶν ἕκαστοι or τὰ ἑαυτοῦ ἕκαστος; but this consideration is not very weighty, for irregularities sometimes occur; and as τὰ ἑαυτῶν precedes ἕκαστος, the latter might be looked upon as an afterthought inserted parenthetically. (3) That St Paul can hardly have written ἕκαστος in the first clause and ἕκαστοι in the second, intending the clauses as correlative; and therefore if we retain ἕκαστος in the first case, it will be necessary to detach the following ἕκαστοι, and join it on with the next sentence. This view seems to have been taken by some older expositors and translators; and I have given it as an alternative reading. Whether the probabilities (independently of the evidence) are in favour of ἕκαστος or ἕκα-

⁵Τοῦτο φρονεῖτε ἐν ὑμῖν, ὃ καὶ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, ⁶ὃς ἐν μορφῇ Θεοῦ ὑπάρχων οὐχ ἄρπαγμὸν ἠγήσατο τὸ τοί in the first case, it is difficult to say. The plural ἕκαστοι would mean 'each and all.'

σκοποῦντες] 'regarding as your aim (σκοπός).' For this sense of σκοπεῖν τὸ ἑαυτοῦ, 'to consult one's own interests,' comp. Eur. El. 1114, Thuc. vi. 12, and other passages quoted by Wetstein. For other instances of participles used where imperatives might have been expected, see Rom. xii. 9, Heb. xiii. 5.

ἀλλὰ καὶ] 'but also,' i.e. let them look beyond their own interests to those of others.

ἕκαστοι] For the repetition of the word compare 1 Cor. vii. 17.

5—11. 'Reflect in your own minds the mind of Christ Jesus. Be humble, as He also was humble. Though existing before the worlds in the Eternal Godhead, yet He did not cling with avidity to the prerogatives of His divine majesty, did not ambitiously display His equality with God; but divested Himself of the glories of heaven, and took upon Him the nature of a servant, assuming the likeness of men. Nor was this all. Having thus appeared among men in the fashion of a man, He humbled Himself yet more, and carried out His obedience even to dying. Nor did He die by a common death: He was crucified, as the lowest malefactor is crucified. But as was His humility, so also was His exaltation. God raised Him to a preeminent height, and gave Him a title and a dignity far above all dignities and titles else. For to the name and majesty of Jesus all created things in heaven and earth and hell shall pay homage on bended knee; and every tongue with praise and thanksgiving shall declare that Jesus Christ is Lord, and in and for Him shall glorify God the Father.'

5. ἐν ὑμῖν] 'in yourselves,' i.e. 'in your hearts,' as Matt. iii. 9 μὴ δόξητε λέγειν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, ix. 3 εἶπαν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς (explained by ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ὑμῶν which follows), ix. 21 etc. For ὑμῖν, where the New Testament writers generally have ἑαυτοῖς and classical authors ὑμῖν αὐτοῖς, compare Matt. vi. 19 μὴ θησαυρίζετε ὑμῖν θησαυρούς; and see A. Buttmann, p. 97. These slight difficulties, together with the irregularity of construction mentioned in the next note, have doubtless led to the substitution of φρονεῖσθω for φρονεῖτε in the received text.

ὃ καὶ κ.τ.λ.] sc. ἐφρονεῖτο. The regular construction would have been ὃ καὶ Χριστὸς Ἰησοῦς ἐφρόνει ἐν ἑαυτῷ.

6. ἐν μορφῇ Θεοῦ] 'in the form of God.' On the meaning of μορφή and its distinction from σχῆμα see the detached note at the end of this chapter. Though μορφή is not the same as φύσις or οὐσία, yet the possession of the μορφή involves participation in the οὐσία also: for μορφή implies not the external accidents but the essential attributes. Similar to this, though not so decisive, are the expressions used elsewhere of the Divinity of the Son, εἰκὼν τοῦ Θεοῦ 2 Cor. iv. 4, Col. i. 15, and χαρακτήρ τῆς ὑποστάσεως τοῦ Θεοῦ Heb. i. 3. Similar also is the term which St John has adopted to express this truth, ὁ Λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ.

ὑπάρχων] The word denotes 'prior existence,' but not necessarily 'eternal existence.' The latter idea however follows in the present instance from the conception of the divinity of Christ which the context supposes. The phrase ἐν μορφῇ Θεοῦ ὑπάρχων is thus an exact counterpart to ἐν ἀρχῇ ἦν ὁ Λόγος καὶ ὁ Λόγος ἦν πρὸς τὸν Θεόν κ.τ.λ., John i. 1. The idea corresponding to ὑπάρχων is expressed in other terms elsewhere; Col. i. 15, 17 πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως, αὐτὸς ἐστιν πρὸ πάντων, Heb. i. 8, 10, John viii. 58, εἶναι ἴσα Θεῷ, ἡ ἀλλὰ ἑαυτὸν ἐκένωσεν μορφὴν δούλου

xvii. 24, and Apoc. i. 17, iii. 14.

οὐχ ἄρπαγμόν ἡγήσατο] ‘yet did not regard it as a prize, a treasure to be clutched and retained at all hazards.’ The more usual form of the word is ἄρπαγμα, which properly signifies simply ‘a piece of plunder,’ but especially with such verbs as ἡγείσθαι, ποιέσθαι, νομίζειν, etc., is employed like ἔρμαιον, εὖρημα, to denote ‘a highly-prized possession, an unexpected gain’: as Plut. Mor. p. 330 D οὐδὲ ὥσπερ ἄρπαγμα καὶ λάφυρον εὐτυχίας ἀνελπίστου σπαράξαι καὶ ἀνασύρασθαι διανοηθείς, Heliod. vii. 20 οὐχ ἄρπαγμα οὐδὲ ἔρμαιον ἡγείται τὸ πρᾶγμα, ib. viii. 7 ἄρπαγμα τὸ ῥηθὲν ἐποίησατο ἡ Ἀρσάκη, Titus Bostr. c. Mañich. i. 2 ἄρπαγμα ψευδὸς τὸ ἀναγκαῖον τῆς φύσεως ἡγείται, Euseb. H. E. viii. 12 τὸν θάνατον ἄρπαγμα θέμενοι, Vit. Const. ii. 31 οἶον ἄρπαγμά τι τὴν ἐπάροδον ποιησάμενοι.

It appears then from these instances that ἄρπαγμα ἡγείσθαι frequently signifies nothing more than ‘to clutch greedily,’ ‘prize highly,’ ‘to set store by,’ the idea of plunder or robbery having passed out of sight. The form ἄρπαγμός however presents greater difficulty; for neither analogy nor usage is decisive as to its meaning: (1) The termination -μός indeed denotes primarily the process, so that ἄρπαγμός would be ‘an act of plundering.’ But as a matter of fact substantives in -μός are frequently used to describe a concrete thing, e.g. θεσμός, χρησμός, φραγμός, etc. (see Buttmann, Ausf. Sprachl. § 119. 23 (II. p. 399); with which compare the English ‘seizure, capture,’ and the like): so that the form is no impediment to the sense adopted above. (2) And again the particular word ἄρπαγμός occurs so rarely that usage cannot be considered decisive. In Plut. Mor. p. 12 A τὸν ἐκ Κρήτης καλούμενον ἄρπαγμόν, the only instance of its occurrence in any classical writer (for though it appears as a various reading for ἄρπαγὴ in Pausan. i. 20. 2, the authority is too slight to deserve consideration), it seems certainly to denote the act. On the other hand in Euseb. Comm. in Luc. vi. (Mai, Nov. Patr. Bibl. iv. p. 165) ὁ Πέτρος δὲ ἄρπαγμόν τὸν διὰ σταυροῦ θάνατον ἐποιεῖτο διὰ τὰς σωτηρίους ἐλπίδας (a reference which I owe to a friend), in Cyril. Alex. de Ador. i. p. 25 (ed. Aubert.) οὐχ ἄρπαγμόν τὴν παραίτησιν ὡς ἐξ ἀδρανούς καὶ ὑδαρεστέρας ἐποιεῖτο φρενός (speaking of Lot’s importunity when the angels declined his offer of hospitality), and in a late anonymous writer in the Catena Possini on Mark x. 42 τῷ δεῖξαι ὅτι οὐκ ἔστιν ἄρπαγμός ἡ τιμή, τῶν ἐθνῶν γὰρ τὸ τοιοῦτον, it is equivalent to ἄρπαγμα. Under these circumstances we may, in choosing between the two senses of ἄρπαγμός, fairly assign to it here the one which best suits the context.

The meaning adopted above satisfies this condition: ‘Though He pre-existed in the form of God, yet He did not look upon equality with God as a prize which must not slip from His grasp, but He emptied Himself, divested Himself, taking upon Him the form of a slave.’ The idea is the same as in 2 Cor. viii. 9 δὲ ὑμᾶς ἐπτώχευσεν πλούσιος ὢν. The other rendering (adopted by the A.V.), ‘thought it not robbery to be equal with God,’ disconnects this clause from its context. The objections to this latter interpretation will be considered more at length in the detached note at the end of the chapter.

τὸ εἶναι ἴσα Θεῷ] ‘to be on an equality with God.’ For this use of ἴσα as a predicate, comp. Job xi. 12 βροτὸς δὲ γεννητὸς γυναικὸς ἴσα ὄνῳ ἐρημίτῃ. So ὁμοία in Thueyd. i. 25 δυνάμει ὄντες...ὁμοία τοῖς Ἑλλήνων πλουσιωτάτοις: see Jelf. Gramm. § 382. The examples of the mere adverbial λαβών, ἐν ὁμοιώματι ἀνθρώπων γενόμενος, ⁸ καὶ σχήματι εὐρεθεὶς ὡς ἄνθρωπος ἐταπείνωσεν ἑαυτόν, γενόμενος use of ἴσα accumulated by commentators do not throw much light on the meaning here. Between the two expressions ἴσος εἶναι and ἴσα εἶναι no other distinction can be drawn, except that the former refers rather to the person, the latter to the attributes. In the present instance ἴσα Θεῷ expresses better the Catholic doctrine of the Person of Christ, than ἴσος Θεῷ; for the latter would seem to divide the Godhead. It is not the statement either of the Lord Himself or of the evangelist, but the complaint of the Jews, that He 'made Himself ἴσον τῷ Θεῷ' (John v. 18).'

In the letter of the synod of Ancyra, directed against the Sabellianism of Marcellus, attention is called to the absence of the article with Θεὸς here and above (ἐν μορφῇ Θεοῦ); καθὼ Θεὸς ὢν οὐτε μορφῇ [οὐτ' ἐν μορφῇ?] ἐστὶ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἀλλὰ Θεοῦ, οὐτε ἴσα ἐστὶ τῷ Θεῷ ἀλλὰ Θεῷ, οὐτε ἀβεντικῶς ὡς ὁ πατήρ (Epiphan. Hær. lxxiii. 9, p. 855 Petav.). The object of this comment, whether right or wrong, is apparently to distinguish between Θεὸς God absolutely and ὁ Θεὸς God the Father; but the editors generally after Petau substitute ἀλλὰ Θεός, ἀλλὰ Θεός, for ἀλλὰ Θεοῦ, ἀλλὰ Θεῷ, thus disregarding the MS and confusing the sense.

7. ἀλλὰ ἑαυτόν] 'So far from this: He divested Himself,' not of His divine nature, for this was impossible, but 'of the glories, the prerogatives, of Deity. This He did by taking upon Him the form of a servant.' The emphatic position of ἑαυτόν points to the humiliation of our Lord as voluntary, self-imposed.

ἐκένωσεν] 'emptied, stripped Himself' of the insignia of majesty.

μορφὴν δούλου λαβών] 'by taking the form of a slave.' The action of λαβών is coincident in time with the action of ἐκένωσεν, as e.g. Ephes.

i. 9: comp. Plat. Men. p. 92 c εὐεργέτησον φράσας, and see Hermann on Viger no. 224, Bernhardt Griech. Synt p. 383. By 'form' is meant not the external semblance only (σχῆμα of the following verse), but the characteristic attributes, as in ver. 6. For ἄνθρωπος the stronger word δοῦλος is substituted: He, who is Master (κύριος) of all, became the slave of all. Comp. Matt. xx. 27, 28, Mark x. 44, 45.

This text was made the starting-point of certain mystic speculations by the early sect of the Sethians; Hippol. Hær. v. 19, x. 11.

ἐν ὁμοιώματι] Unlike μορφή, this word does not imply the reality of our Lord's humanity: see Trench N. T. Syn. 1st ser. § xv. 'Forma (μορφή) dicit quiddam absolutum; similitudo (ὁμοίωμα) dicit re'ationem ad alia ejusdem conditionis; habitus (σχῆμα) refertur ad aspectum et sensum,' is Bengel's distinction. Thus ὁμοίωμα stands midway between μορφή and σχῆμα. The plural ἀνθρώπων is used; for Christ, as the second Adam, represents not the individual man, but the human race; Rom. v. 15, 1 Cor. xv. 45—47.

γενόμενος] like λαβών is opposed to the foregoing ὑπάρχων (ver. 6), and marks the assumption of the new upon the old.

8. 'Nor was this His lowest degradation. He not only became a man, but He was treated as the meanest of men. He died the death of a criminal slave.'

σχήματι κ.τ.λ.] The former verse dwells on the contrast between what He was from the beginning and what He became afterwards: hence λαβών (not ἔχων), ὁμοίωμα (not μορφή), γενόμενος (not ὢν), all words expressive of change. In the present the opposition is between what He is in Himself, and what He appeared in the eyes of men:

ὑπήκοος μέχρι θανάτου, θανάτου δὲ σταυροῦ· ὁ δὲ καὶ ὁ Θεὸς αὐτὸν ὑπερύψωσεν καὶ ἐχαρίσατο αὐτῷ τὸ ὄνομα

hence σχήματι (for ὁμοιώματι or μορφῇ), εὐρεθείς (for γενόμενος or ὑπάρχων), ὡς ἄνθρωπος (for ἄνθρωπος), all expressions implying external semblance. 'He hath no form nor comeliness: there is no beauty that we should desire him: he was despised and we esteemed him not' (Is. liii. 2, 3). For σχήματι εὐρεθείς κ.τ.λ. compare Test. xii Patr. Zab. 9 ὕψεσθε Θεὸν ἐν σχήματι ἀνθρώπου, Benj. 10 ἐπὶ γῆς φάνετα ἐν μορφῇ ἀνθρώπου [ταπεινώσεως].

ὑπήκοος] sc. τῷ Θεῷ: comp. ver. 9, διὰ καὶ ὁ Θεὸς κ.τ.λ. On the ὑπακοή of Christ comp. Rom. v. 19, Hebr. v. 8.

θανάτου δὲ σταυροῦ] 'I said death, but it was no common death. It was a death which involved not intense suffering only but intense shame also: a death reserved for malefactors and slaves: a death on which the Mosaic law has uttered a curse (Deut. xxi. 23), and which even Gentiles consider the most foul and cruel of all punishments (Cic. Verr. v. 64); which has been ever after to the Jews a stumbling-block and to the Greeks foolishness.' Compare Heb. xii. 2 ὑπέμεινεν σταυρὸν αἰσχύνης καταφρονήσας, and see Galatians p. 150 sq. The contrast of his own position must have deepened St Paul's sense of his Master's humiliation. As a Roman citizen he could under no circumstances suffer such degradation; and accordingly, if we may accept the tradition, while St Peter died on the cross, he himself was executed by the sword: see Tertull. Scorp. 15, and comp. Ep. Gall. in Euseb. H. E. v. 1, § 12.

9. διό] In consequence of this voluntary humiliation, in fulfilment of the divine law which He Himself enunciated, ὁ ταπεινῶν ἑαυτὸν ὑψώθησεται (Luke xiv. 11, xviii. 14).

διὸ καὶ] is a frequent collocation of particles in the New Testament with various shades of meaning. Here the καὶ implies reciprocation.

ὑπερύψωσεν] The word is found several times in the LXX, but apparently does not occur in classical writers.

ἐχαρίσατο αὐτῷ] 'gave to Him, the Son of Man.' Ὑπερύψωσεν and ἐχαρίσατο are used in reference to the subordinate position voluntarily assumed by the Son of God.

τὸ ὄνομα] 'the name, i.e. the title and dignity,' comp. Ephes. i. 21 ὑπεράνω πάσης ἀρχῆς καὶ ἐξουσίας καὶ δυνάμεως καὶ κυριότητος καὶ παντὸς ὀνόματος ὀνομαζομένου, Heb. i. 4 ὅσῳ διαφορώτερον παρ' αὐτοὺς κεκληρονόμηκεν ὄνομα. If St Paul were referring to any one term, Κύριος would best explain the reference; for it occurs in the context ὅτι Κύριος Ἰησοῦς Χριστός, ver. 11. But here, as in the passages quoted, we should probably look to a very common Hebrew sense of 'name,' not meaning a definite appellation but denoting office, rank, dignity. In this case the use of the 'Name of God' in the Old Testament to denote the Divine Presence or the Divine Majesty, more especially as the object of adoration and praise, will suggest the true meaning: since the context dwells on the honour and worship henceforth offered to Him on whom 'the name' has been conferred. 'To praise the name, to bless the name, to fear the name, of God' are frequent expressions in the Old Testament. See especially Gesenius Thesaur. p. 1432, s. v. שׁוֹמֵר , where he defines 'the name of God,' 'Deus quatenus ab hominibus invocatur, celebratur.' Philo in a remarkable passage (among other titles assigned to our Lord in the Apostolic writings) gives 'the Name of God' as a designation of the 'Word': καὶ ἂν μηδέπω μέντοι τυγχάνῃ τις ἀξιοχρεῶς ὧν υἱὸς Θεοῦ προσαγορεύεσθαι, σπουδαζέτω κοσμεῖσθαι κατὰ τὸν πρωτόγονον αὐτοῦ τὸ ὑπὲρ πάντων ὄνομα, ἵνα ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι Ἰησοῦ πάντων γόνυ κάμψῃ ἐπουρανίων καὶ ἐπιγείων καὶ καταχθονολόγον, τὸν ἄγγελον πρεσβύτατον, ὡς ἀρχάγγελον πολυώνυμον ὑπάρχοντα καὶ γὰρ ἀρχή καὶ ὄνομα Θεοῦ καὶ λόγος καὶ ὁ κατ' εἰκόνα ἄνθρωπος καὶ ὁρῶν Ἰσραὴλ προσαγορεύεται (de Conf. Ling. § 28, p. 427 M). St Paul's idea here seems to be the same; for the parallel remains unaffected by the fact that the Word was not revealed to Philo as an incarnate Person. Somewhat different in expression, though similar in meaning, is St John's language, Rev. xix. 13. The reading τὸ ὄνομα (for which the received text has ὄνομα without the article) is unquestionably correct, both as having the support of the oldest mss, and as giving a much fuller meaning. For other instances where τὸ ὄνομα is used absolutely, comp. Acts v. 41 κατηξιώθησαν ὑπὲρ τοῦ ὀνόματος ἀτιμασθῆναι, Ignat. Eph. 3 δέδεμαι ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι, Philad. 10 δοξάσαι τὸ ὄνομα. In all these cases transcribers or translators have stumbled at the expression and interpolated words to explain it. The same motive will account for the omission of the article here.

10. This passage is modelled on Isaiah xlv. 23 ὅτι ἐμοὶ κάμψει πάντων γόνυ καὶ ἐξομολογήσεται πάντα γλῶσσαι τῷ Θεῷ (so Alex., but Vat. has καὶ ὁμείται π. γλ. τὸν Θεόν, and Sin. καὶ ὁμνιται π. γλ. τὸν κύριον), the text being modified to suit St Paul's application to the Son. In Rom. xiv. 10, 11, on the other hand, the same text is directly quoted: πάντες γὰρ παραστησόμεθα τῷ βήματι τοῦ Θεοῦ (v. 1. τοῦ Χριστοῦ)· γέγραπται γάρ, Ζῶ ἐγώ, λέγει Κύριος, ὅτι ἐμοὶ κάμψει κ.τ.λ.; the introductory words however, Ζῶ ἐγώ, λέγει Κύριος, being substituted for κατ' ἔμαντος ὀμνῶ of the prophet. In the passage in the Romans then, if the reading τοῦ Χριστοῦ were adopted, Κύριος would refer naturally to our Lord, and thus it would serve to illustrate the application of the text here; but the balance of authority is decidedly in favour of τοῦ Θεοῦ, which is doubtless correct; the other reading having been introduced from 2 Cor. v. 10, where the words τὸ βῆμα τοῦ Χριστοῦ occur.

Yet even without the countenance which would thus have been obtained from Rom. xiv. 11, it seems clear from the context that 'the name of Jesus' is not only the medium but the object of adoration. The motive of the passage (as shown by the last verse) is to declare the honour paid to Jesus; and that the individual expressions suggest this interpretation will appear from the following note.

ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι] 'in the name,' i.e. the majesty, the manifestation to man, as an object of worship and praise. It is not 'the name Jesus,' but 'the name of Jesus.' The name here must be the same with the name in the preceding verse. And the personal name Jesus cannot there be meant; for the bestowal of the name is represented as following upon the humiliation and death of the Son of Man. If such had been the meaning, the words should have run, not 'He bestowed on Him the name etc.,' but 'He exalted the name borne by Him'; for, though eminently significant in His case and thus prophetic of His glorious office (Matt. i. 21), it was the personal name of many others besides. That the bending of the knee is an act of reverence to Jesus, and not only to God through Him, will appear from the following considerations; (1) The parallel clause describes an act of reverence paid directly to the Son as its object, the ultimate aim however being the glory of the Father, πάντα γλῶσσαι ἐξομολογήσεται ὅτι Κύριος Ἰησοῦς κ.τ.λ. (2) The construction ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι Ἰησοῦ πάντων γόνυ κάμψῃ in this sense is supported by many analogous instances where direct adoration is meant: e.g. Ps. lxxiii.

νίων, ¹¹ καὶ πᾶσα γλῶσσα ἐξομολογῆσεται ὅτι Κύριος Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς εἰς δόξαν Θεοῦ πατρὸς.

¹² Ὡστε, ἀγαπητοί μου, καθὼς πάντοτε ὑπακούσατε,

5 ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι σου ἄρῳ τὰς χεῖράς μου, Ps. xli. 10 ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι σου ἐξομολογησόμεθα, Ps. cv. 3 ἐπαινεῖσθε ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι τῷ ἁγίῳ αὐτοῦ, 1 Kings viii. 44 προσεύχονται ἐν ὀνόματι Κυρίου, besides the very frequent expression ἐπικαλεῖσθαι ἐν ὀνόματι Κυρίου (or Θεοῦ) 1 Kings xviii. 24, 25, 26, 2 Kings v. 11, Ps. xx. 8, cxvi. 17, 2 Chron. xxviii. 15.

τῶν ἐπουρανίων κ.τ.λ.] 'all creation, all things whatsoever and wheresoever they be.' The whole universe, whether animate or inanimate, bends the knee in homage and raises its voice in praise: see especially Rev. v. 13 καὶ πᾶν κτίσμα ὃ ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς καὶ ὑποκάτω τῆς γῆς καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς θαλάσσης [ἃ] ἐστὶν καὶ τὰ ἐν αὐτοῖς πάντα, καὶ ἤκουσα λέγοντας τῷ καθημένῳ κ.τ.λ.: and comp. Ephes. i. 20—22. So in like manner St Paul represents 'all creation' as awaiting the redemption of Christ, Rom. viii. 22. Compare Ignat. Trall. 9 βλέπόντων τῶν ἐπουρανίων καὶ ἐπιγείων καὶ ὑποθονίων, Polyc. Phil. 2 ὃ ὑπεράγει τὰ πάντα ἐπουράνια καὶ ἐπίγεια. It would seem therefore that the adjectives here are neuter; and any limitation to intelligent beings, while it detracts from the universality of the homage, is not required by the expressions. The personification of universal nature offering its praise and homage to its Creator in the 148th Psalm will serve to illustrate St Paul's meaning here. If this view be correct, all endeavours to explain the three words of different classes of intelligent beings; as Christians, Jews, heathens; angels, men, devils; the angels, the living, the dead; souls of the blessed, men on earth, souls in purgatory, etc., are out of place.

11. ἐξομολογήσεται] 'proclaim with thanksgiving.' In itself ἐξομολογεῖσθαι is simply 'to declare or confess openly or plainly.' But as its secondary sense 'to offer praise or thanksgiving' has almost entirely supplanted its primary meaning in the LXX, where it is of frequent occurrence, and as moreover it has this secondary sense in the very passage of Isaiah which St Paul adapts, the idea of praise or thanksgiving ought probably not to be excluded here. Compare the construction ἐξομολογοῦμαι σοι πάτερ ὅτι, Matt. xi. 25, Luke x. 21. The authorities are divided between ἐξομολογήσεται and ἐξομολογήσεται. In a doubtful case I have given the preference to the latter, as transcribers would be tempted to substitute the conjunctive to conform to κάμψη. The future is justified by such passages as Rev. xxii. 14 ἵνα ἔσται... καὶ εἰσέλθωσιν; see Winer § xli. p. 304.

Κύριος Ἰησοῦς] See Acts ii. 36 καὶ Κύριον αὐτὸν καὶ Χριστὸν ὃ Θεὸς ἐποίησεν, τοῦτον τὸν Ἰησοῦν ὃν ὑμεῖς ἐσταυρώσατε, Rom. x. 9 ἐὰν ὁμολογήσῃς [ἐν τῷ στόματι σου Κύριον] Ἰησοῦν, i.e. 'confess Jesus to be Lord,' where the other reading ὅτι Κύριος Ἰησοῦς is a paraphrase; comp. 1 Cor. xii. 3.

12, 13. 'Therefore, my beloved, having the example of Christ's humility to guide you, the example of Christ's exaltation to encourage you, as ye have always been obedient hitherto, so continue. Do not look to my presence to stimulate you. Labour earnestly not only at times when I am with you, but now when I am far away. With a nervous and trembling anxiety work out your salvation for yourselves. For yourselves, did I say? Nay, ye are not alone. It is God working in you from first to last: God that inspires the earliest impulse, and God that directs the final achievement: for such is His good pleasure.'

ὑπακούσατε] 'were obedient,' i.e. to God, not to St Paul himself. Ὑπακοή μὴ ὡς ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ μου μόνον, ἀλλὰ νῦν πολλῶ μαλλον ἐν τῇ ἀπουσίᾳ μου, μετὰ φόβου καὶ τρόμου τὴν ἑαυτῶν σωτηρίαν κατεργάζεσθε. ¹³Θεὸς γάρ ἐστιν ὁ ἐνεργῶν ἐν ὑμῖν καὶ τὸ θέλειν καὶ τὸ ἐνεργεῖν ὑπὲρ τῆς is most frequently so used in the New Testament of submission to the Gospel, e.g. Rom. i. 5, xv. 18, xvi. 19, 26, 2 Cor. vii. 15, x. 5, 6. It here refers back to the example of Christ, who Himself 'showed obedience' (ὕπηκοος γενόμενος ver. 8).

μὴ ὡς ἐν τῇ κ.τ.λ.] 'do not, as though my presence prompted you, work out in my presence only etc.' The sentence is a fusion of two ideas, μὴ ὡς ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ μου κατεργάζεσθε, and μὴ ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ μου μόνον κατεργάζεσθε, 'do not be energetic because I am present,' and 'do not be energetic only when I am present.' The pleonastic ὡς lays stress on the sentiment or motive of the agent: compare Rom. ix. 32, 2 Cor. ii. 17, Philem. 14.

φόβου καὶ τρόμου] i.e. a nervous and trembling anxiety to do right. Such at least seems to be the meaning of the phrase in St Paul, 2 Cor. vii. 15, Ephes. vi. 5: comp. 1 Cor. ii. 3. The words occur together frequently in the LXX, where however they have a sterner import: Gen. ix. 2, Exod. xv. 16, Deut. ii. 25, xi. 25, Ps. liv. 5, Is. xix. 16.

ἑαυτῶν] The word is emphatic in reference both to what goes before and to what follows. 'Do not depend on me, but on yourselves,' 'When you depend on yourselves, you depend on God.'

κατεργάζεσθε] 'work out,' as e.g. Xen. Mem. iv. 2. 7 πλείονων περὶ ταῦτα πραγματευομένων ἐλάττους οἱ κατεργαζόμενοι γίνονται. It is a common word in St Paul.

13. γάρ] This verse supplies at once the stimulus to and the corrective of the precept in the preceding: 'Work, for God works with you': and 'The good is not your own doing, but God's.'

ἐνεργῶν] 'works mightily, works effectively.' The preposition of the compound is unconnected with the ἐν of ἐν ὑμῖν ('in your hearts'). See the notes on Gal. ii. 8.

καὶ τὸ θέλειν κ.τ.λ.] 'not less the will, the first impulse, than the work, the actual performance.' 'Nos ergo volumus, sed Deus in nobis operatur et velle; nos ergo operamur, sed Deus in nobis operatur et operari,' Augustin. de Don. Persev. 33 (x. p. 838, ed. Ben.). It was not sufficient to say Θεὸς ἐστιν ὁ ἐνεργῶν, lest he should seem to limit the part of God to the actual working: this activity of God comprises τὸ θέλειν as well as τὸ ἐνεργεῖν. The θέλειν and the ἐνεργεῖν correspond respectively to the 'gratia præveniens' and the 'gratia cooperans' of a later theology.

ὑπὲρ τῆς κ.τ.λ.] 'in fulfilment of His benevolent purpose'; for God 'will have all men to be saved' (1 Tim. ii. 4). The words should therefore be connected with Θεὸς ἐστιν ὁ ἐνεργῶν, not with καὶ τὸ θέλειν κ.τ.λ.; for this latter connexion would introduce an idea alien to the context. On εὐδοκία see the note i. 15.

14—16. 'Be ye not like Israel of old. Never give way to discontent and murmuring, to questioning and unbelief. So live that you call forth no censure from others, that you keep your own consciences single and pure. Show yourselves blameless children of God amidst a crooked and perverse generation. For you are set in this world as luminaries in the firmament. Hold out to others the word of life. That so, when Christ shall come to judge all our works, I may be able to boast of your faith, and to show εὐδοκίας. ¹⁴πάντα ποιεῖτε χωρὶς γογγυσμῶν καὶ δια-λογισμῶν, ¹⁵ἵνα γένησθε ἄμεμπτοι καὶ ἀκέραιοι, τέκνα Θεοῦ δμῶμα μέσον γενεᾶς σκολιδᾶς καὶ διεστραμ-μένης, ἐν οἷς φαίνεσθε ὡς φωστῆρες ἐν κόσμῳ, ¹⁶λόγον that my race has not been run in vain, that my struggles have indeed been crowned with success.'

14. γογγυσμῶν] 'murmurings.' The word is constantly used in the LXX of Israel in the wilderness: compare 1 Cor. x. 10 μηδὲ γογγύζετε καθάπερ τινὲς αὐτῶν ἐγόγγυσαν. The same reference to the Israelites, which is directly expressed in the passage just quoted, seems to have been present to the Apostle's mind here; for in the next verse he quotes from the song of Moses. For γογγυσμός the Athenians used τονθορυσμός: the former however occurs in the oldest Ionic writers (see Lobeck Phryn. p. 358). This is one of many instances of the exceptional character of the Attic dialect: see above on πυρόμενοι i. 28 and Galatians vi. 6, and p. 92.

διαλογισμῶν] This word in the New Testament means sometimes 'inward questionings,' sometimes 'disputes, discussion'; for there is no sufficient ground for denying it this second meaning: see 1 Tim. ii. 8. Here it seems to have the former sense. As γογγυσμός is the moral, so διαλογισμός is the intellectual rebellion against God.

15. γένησθε] 'may approve yourselves': better supported than the other reading ἦτε.

ἀκέραιοι] 'pure, sincere,' literally 'unmixed,' 'unadulterated' (from κεράννυμι); for the word is used of pure wine (Athen. ii. 45 B), of unalloyed metal (Plut. Mor. 1154 B), and the like. Comp. Philo Leg. ad Cai. § 42, p. 594 M τὴν χάριν διδοὺς ἔδωκεν οὐκ ἀκέραιον ἀλλ' ἀναμίξας αὐτῇ δέος ἀργαλεώτερον. The stress laid in the New Testament on simplicity of character appears in this as in many other words: ἀπλοῦς, εἰλικρινής, δίψυχος etc. Of the two words here used, the former (ἀμεμπτοι) relates to the judgment of others, while the latter (ἀκέραιοι) describes the intrinsic character.

τέκνα Θεοῦ κ.τ.λ.] A direct contrast to the Israelites in the desert, who in the song of Moses are described as οὐκ αὐτῷ τέκνα (i.e. no children of God) μωμητά, γενεὰ σκολιὰ καὶ διεστραμμένη (Deut. xxxii. 5, LXX): comp. Luke ix. 41.

δμῶμα] Both forms δμωμος and δμώμητος are equally common. Here the weight of evidence is in favour of the former, though there is some authority for the latter: in 2 Pet. iii. 14 on the other hand, δμώμητοι has much stronger support than δμωμοι.

μέσον] For this adverbial use see Steph. Thes. (ed. Hase and Dindorf), s. v. p. 824. The received text substitutes ἐν μέσῳ.

διεστραμμένης] 'distorted,' a stronger word than σκολιᾶς: comp. Arrian, Epict. iii. 6. 8 οἱ μὴ παντάπασιν διεστραμμένοι τῶν ἀνθρώπων (comp. i. 29. 3). It corresponds to a strong reduplicated form in the Hebrew לְתַלְתֵּל.

φαίνεσθε] 'ye appear,' not 'ye shine' (φαίνετε) as the A. V. The same error is made in Matt. xxiv 27, Rev. xviii. 23. On the other hand in Matt. ii. 7 τοῦ φαινομένου ἀστέρως, it is correctly rendered 'appeared.' φαίνεσθε here should be taken as an indicative, not an imperative.

ὡς φωστῆρες] 'as luminaries.' The word is used almost exclusively of the heavenly bodies (except when it is metaphorical) as e.g. Gen. i. 14, 16 (where it is a rendering of כּוֹכָבִים), Eccus. xliii. 7, Orac. Sibyll. ii. 186, 200, iii. 88 etc. Compare esp. Wisd.

ζωῆς ἐπέχοντες, εἰς καύχημα ἐμοὶ εἰς ἡμέραν Χριστοῦ, ὅτι οὐκ εἰς κενὸν ἔδραμον οὐδὲ εἰς κενὸν ἐκοπίασα.
¹⁷ ἀλλὰ εἰ καὶ σπένδομαι ἐπὶ τῇ θυσίᾳ καὶ λειτουργίᾳ xiii. 2 φωστήρας οὐρανοῦ πρυτάνεις κόσμου. The word occurs only once again in the New Testament, Rev. xxi. 11, where also it should be translated 'luminary.'

ἐν κόσμῳ] To be taken not with φωστήρες alone (as the passage of Wisdom just quoted might suggest), but with φαίνεσθε ὡς φωστήρες. For in the former case κόσμῳ must signify the material world as distinguished from the moral world. But this is hardly possible in the language of the New Testament: for though κόσμος sometimes refers to external nature, yet as it much more frequently has a moral significance, it cannot well, unless so defined by the context, signify the former to the exclusion of the latter. It is therefore used here in the same sense as in John iii. 19 τὸ φῶς ἐγήλυθεν εἰς τὸν κόσμον καὶ ἡγάπησαν οἱ ἄνθρωποι μᾶλλον τὸ σκότος κ.τ.λ.: comp. i. 9, 10, ix. 5, xii. 46, etc.

16. ἐπέχοντες] The foregoing clause ἐν οἷς φαίνεσθε ὡς φωστήρες ἐν κόσμῳ should probably be taken as parenthetical, so that ἐπέχοντες is attached to ἵνα γένησθε κ.τ.λ. For this sense of ἐπέχειν 'to hold out' see Hom. Il. ix. 489, xxii. 494, Ar. Nub. 1382, etc. (οἶνον, κοτύλην), Pausan. i. 33. 7, Plut. Mor. 265 A, 268 F (μαστόν, θηλήν, γάλα). If therefore we are to look for any metaphor in ἐπέχοντες, it would most naturally be that of offering food or wine. At all events it seems wholly unconnected with the preceding image in φωστήρες.

εἰς ἡμέραν Χριστοῦ] 'against the day of Christ,' as i. 10; comp. i. 6. 'The day of Christ' is a phrase peculiar to this epistle. More commonly it is 'the day of the Lord.' For this reference to the great judgment in connexion with his ministerial labours compare 1 Cor. iii. 12, 13, iv. 3—5, and esp. 2 Cor. i. 14.

εἰς κενὸν ἔδραμον] as Gal. ii. 2. This passage is quoted Polyc. Phil. § 9 οὔτοι πάντες οὐκ εἰς κενὸν ἔδραμον: compare 2 Tim. iv. 7.

ἐκοπίασα] Probably a continuation of the same metaphor, referring to the training for the athletic games: compare 1 Cor. ix. 24—27. At least κοπιᾶν is elsewhere associated with τρέχειν in the same way: Anthol. iii. p. 166 πῦνε καὶ εὐφραίνου· τί γὰρ αὔριον, ἢ τί τὸ μέλλον, οὐδεὶς γινώσκει· μὴ τρέχε, μὴ κοπίᾳ, Ignat. Polyc. 6 συγκοπιᾶτε ἀλλήλοις, συναθλίετε, συντρέχετε.

17, 18. 'I spoke of my severe labours for the Gospel. I am ready even to die in the same cause. If I am required to pour out my life-blood as a libation over the sacrificial offering of your faith, I rejoice myself and I congratulate you all therein. Yea in like manner I ask you also to rejoice and to congratulate me.'

Thus the particles ἀλλὰ εἰ καὶ will refer to the preceding ἔδραμον; ἐκοπίασα. Most recent commentators explain the connexion in a very harsh and artificial way. Assuming that St Paul had before mentioned his anticipation of living till the advent of Christ εἰς ἡμέραν Χριστοῦ (ver. 16), they suppose that he now suggests the alternative of his dying before. But in fact no such anticipation was expressed: for his work would be equally tested at 'the day of Christ,' whether he were alive or dead when that day came. The faint expectation, which in i. 6, 10 (where the same phrase occurs) is suggested by the context, finds no expression here. On εἰ καὶ as distinguished from καὶ εἰ see the note on Gal. i. 8.

σπένδομαι] As his death actually approaches, he says ἐγὼ γὰρ ἤδη σπέν-τῆς πίστεως ὑμῶν, χαίρω καὶ συγχαίρω πᾶσιν ὑμῖν.

 18 τὸ δὲ αὐτὸ καὶ ὑμεῖς χαίρετε καὶ συγχαίρετέ μοι.

δομαι 2 Tim. iv. 6. Comp. Ignat. Rom. 2 πλέον μοι μὴ παράσχηθε τοῦ σπονδισθῆναι Θεῷ, ὡς ἔτι θυσιαστήριον ἔτοιμόν ἐστιν, uttered under similar circumstances. It is a striking coincidence, that St Paul's great heathen contemporary Seneca, whose name tradition has linked with his own, is reported to have used a similar metaphor when on the point of death: Tac. Ann. xv. 64 'resurgens proximos servorum, addita voce libare se liquorem illum Jovi liberatori': compare the account of Thrasea, Ann. xvi. 35. The present tense σπένδομαι places the hypothesis vividly before the eyes: but it does not, as generally explained, refer to present dangers, as though the process were actually begun: comp. e. g. Matt. xii. 26, xviii. 8, 9, etc.

ἐπὶ τῇ θυσίᾳ] The general import of the metaphor is clear; but it has been questioned whether the reference is to heathen libations or to Jewish drink-offerings. The preposition (ἐπὶ) seems hardly conclusive. Even if it be true that the drink-offerings of the Jews were always poured around and not upon the altar (Joseph. Ant. iii. 9. 4 σπένδουσι περὶ τὸν βωμὸν τὸν οἶνον; see Ewald Allerth. p. 37 sq. 2te ausg.), yet the LXX certainly uses the preposition 'upon' to describe them: Levit. v. 11 οὐκ ἐπιχεεῖ ἐπ' αὐτὸ ἔλαιον, Num. xxviii. 24 ἐπὶ τοῦ ὀλοκαυτώματος τοῦ διὰ παντὸς ποιήσεις τὴν σπονδὴν αὐτοῦ. Nor need ἐπὶ with the dative necessarily be translated 'upon,' but may mean 'accompanying.' On the other hand, as St Paul is writing to converted heathens, a reference to heathen sacrifice is more appropriate (comp. 2 Cor. ii. 14); while owing to the greater prominence of the libation in heathen rites the metaphor would be more expressive. For the appropriateness of the preposition in this case see Hom. Il. xi. 775 σπένδων αἰθοπα οἶνον ἐπ' αἰθομένους ἱεροῖσιν, Arrian Alex. vi. 19 σπείσας ἐπὶ τῇ θυσίᾳ τὴν φιδλήν κ.τ.λ., and the common word ἐπισπένδειν. The 'sacrifice' (θυσία) here is the victim, not the act.

λειτουργία] This word has passed through the following meanings: (1) A civil service, a state-burden, especially in the technical language of Athenian law: (2) A function or office of any kind, as of the bodily organs, e. g. the mouth, Arist. Part. An. ii. 3: (3) Sacerdotal ministration especially, whether among the Jews (as Heb. viii. 6, ix. 21, and commonly in the LXX), or among heathen nations (as Diod. Sic. i. 21, where it is used of the Egyptian priesthood): (4) The eucharistic services; and thence more generally (5) Set forms of divine worship. As the word is applied most frequently in the Bible to sacerdotal functions, it should probably be taken here as supplementing the idea of θυσία. Thus St Paul's language expresses the fundamental idea of the Christian Church, in which an universal priesthood has supplanted the exclusive ministrations of a select tribe or class: see 1 Pet. ii. 5 ἱεράτευμα ἁγίων ἀνενέγκαι πνευματικὰς θυσίας. The Philippians are the priests; their faith (or their good works springing from their faith) is the sacrifice: St Paul's life-blood the accompanying libation. Commentators have much confused the image by representing St Paul himself as the sacrificer.

συγχαίρω] 'I congratulate,' not 'I rejoice with.' As joy is enjoined on the Philippians in the second clause, it must not be assumed on their part in the first. For this sense of συγχαίρειν 'to congratulate,' where reciprocation on the part of the person appealed to is not so much presupposed as invited, see e. g. Plut. Mor. 231 B συγχαίρω τῇ πόλει τριακοσίους κρείττονας μου πολίτας έχούσῃ, Polyb. xxix. 7. 4,

¹⁹ Ἐλπίζω δὲ ἐν κυρίῳ Ἰησοῦ Τιμόθεον ταχέως πέμψαι ὑμῖν, ἵνα καὶ γὰρ εὐψυχῶ γινούσ τὰ περὶ ὑμῶν. ²⁰ οὐδένα γὰρ ἔχω ἰσόψυχον, ὅστις γνησίως τὰ περὶ ὑμῶν μεριμνήσει. ²¹ οἱ πάντες γὰρ τὰ ἐαυτῶν ζητοῦσιν, οὐ τὰ

Barnab. 1 μάλλον συγχαίρω ἑμαυτῷ, etc.

18. τὸ δὲ αὐτό] ‘in the same way,’ i.e. τὴν αὐτὴν χαρὰν χαίρετε; as Matt. xxvii. 44 τὸ δ’ αὐτὸ καὶ οἱ λησταί... ὠνεΐδιζον αὐτόν. The accusative defines the character rather than the object of the action, so that ταῦτα χαίρειν (Demosth. de Cor. p. 323) is ‘to have the same joys.’ For the poetical use of χαίρειν and similar words with an accusative of the object see Valcknaer on Eur. Hipp. 1338.

καὶ ὑμεῖς χαίρετε] We are reminded of the messenger who brought the tidings of the battle of Marathon, expiring on the first threshold with these words on his lips, χαίρετε καὶ χαίρομεν, Plut. Mor. p. 347 c. See the note on iv. 4.

19—24. ‘But though absent myself, I hope in the Lord to send Timotheus shortly to you. This I purpose not for your sakes only but for my own also; that hearing how you fare, I may take heart. I have chosen him, for I have no other messenger at hand who can compare with him, none other who will show the same lively and instinctive interest in your welfare. For all pursue their own selfish aims, reckless of the will of Christ. But the credentials of Timotheus are before you: you know how he has been tested by long experience, how as a son with a father he has laboured with me in the service of the Gospel. Him therefore I hope to send without delay, when I see what turn my affairs will take. At the same time I trust in the Lord, that I shall visit you before long in person.’

19. Ἐλπίζω δέ] This is connected in thought with ver. 12. ‘I urged the duty of self-reliance during my absence. Yet I do not intend to leave you without guidance. I purpose sending Timotheus directly, and I hope to visit you myself before long.’ Recent commentators seem to agree in taking ἐλπίζω δέ as oppositive to the fear expressed in the foregoing εἰ καὶ σπένδομαι; but the possibility of his own death and the intention of sending Timotheus do not stand in any sort of opposition.

ἐν κυρίῳ Ἰησοῦ] So above i. 14 and below ii. 24. The same idea is expressed still more explicitly i. 8 ἐν σπλάγχνοις Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ. The Christian is a part of Christ, a member of His body. His every thought and word and deed proceeds from Christ, as the centre of volition. Thus he loves in the Lord, he hopes in the Lord, he boasts in the Lord, he labours in the Lord, etc. He has one guiding principle in acting and in forbearing to act, μόνον ἐν Κυρίῳ (1 Cor. vii. 39).

καὶ γὰρ εὐψυχῶ] ‘I also may take courage.’ Comp. ver. 27 οὐκ αὐτὸν δὲ μόνον ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐμέ. The guidance of the Philippians was one object of Timothy’s mission; St Paul’s comfort was another. While εὐψυχος, εὐψυχία, are not uncommon, the verb εὐψυχεῖν seems not to occur in classical writers, though the imperative εὐψυχεῖ appears frequently on epitaphs: see Jacobs Anthol. xii. p. 304. In Pollux iii. 28 εὐψυχεῖν is given as a synonyme for θαρσεῖν. Comp. Hermas Vis. i. 2.

20. οὐδένα γάρ] This condemnation must be limited to the persons available for such a mission. See the introduction, p. 35.

ἰσόψυχον] ‘like-minded,’ not with St Paul himself, as it is generally taken, but with Timotheus. Otherwise the words would have been οὐδένα γάρ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. ²² τὴν δὲ δοκιμὴν αὐτοῦ γινώσκετε, ὅτι ὡς πατρὶ τέκνον σὺν ἐμοὶ ἐδούλευσεν εἰς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον.

²³ τοῦτον μὲν οὖν ἐλπίζω πέμψαι, ὡς ἂν ἀφίδω τὰ περι-

21. οὐ τὰ Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ.

ἄλλον or οὐδένα γὰρ πλὴν τούτου. The word ισόψυχος is extremely rare. It occurs in Æsch. Agam. 1470 (1446) where it has much the same sense as here. In Ps. liv. 14 ἀνθρώπε ἰσόψυχε it is a rendering of כַּעֲרִי 'as my price,' i.e. 'quem mihi æquiparabam, quem diligebam ut me ipsum' (Gesen.), being thus equivalent to ἀντίψυχε.

ὅστις] 'such that he.' See Gal. iv. 24 (note), 26, v. 19.

γνησίως] i.e. as a birth-right, as an instinct derived from his spiritual parentage: see esp. [Demosth.] c. Neær. p. 1353 τοὺς φύσει πολίτας καὶ γνησίως μετέχοντας τῆς πόλεως, Εἰρητάρῃ. p. 1390 τοὺς μὲν...πολίτας προσ-αγορευομένους ὁμοίους εἶναι τοῖς εἰσποιήτοις τῶν παίδων, τούτους δὲ γνησίως γόνυ τῆς πατρίδος πολίτας εἶναι. Timotheus was neither a supposititious (νόθος) nor an adopted (εἰσποίητος) son, but, as St Paul calls him elsewhere, γνήσιον τέκνον ἐν πίστει (1 Tim. i. 2, comp. Tit. i. 4); comp. Hippol. Hær. vi. 20 Ἰσιδωρος ὁ Βασιλείδου παῖς γνήσιος 'his father's own son.' He recognised this filial relationship (ὡς πατρὶ τέκνον ver. 22); he inherited all the interests and affections of his spiritual father. This, I suppose, is Chrysostom's meaning, when he explains it τούτῃσι πατρικῶς (compare πατρικὴ φιλία, ἔχθρα etc.). Comp. Heb. xii. 8 ἄρα νόθοι καὶ οὐχ υἱοὶ ἐστε.

21. οἱ πάντες] 'one and all,' 'all without exception.' For the force of the article with πάντες, πάντα, see Bernhardy vi. p. 320, Jelf § 454.

22. δοκιμὴν] 'approved character,' as in 2 Cor. ii. 9, ix. 13, and probably Rom. v. 4. See Fritzsche Rom. i. p. 259.

γινώσκετε] 'ye recognise,' 'ye remember and acknowledge.' Timotheus was personally well known to the Philippians; see the note i. 1.

ὡς πατρὶ τέκνον] This is often explained by understanding σὺν with πατρὶ from the following clause σὺν ἐμοὶ; see Jelf § 650. Instances of such omissions however occur chiefly if not entirely in poetry, and are found mostly in clauses connected by conjunctions (ἤ, καί, etc.). The preposition is omitted here, because the exact form of the sentence was not yet decided in the writer's mind when the first words were written; see Winer § 1. p. 441, § lxiii. p. 599. For this testimony to Timotheus compare 1 Cor. iv. 17 ὃς ἐστίν μου τέκνον ἀγαπητὸν καὶ πιστὸν ἐν κυρίῳ, xvi. 10 τὸ γὰρ ἔργον κυρίου ἐργάζεται ὡς καὶ γώ.

23. τοῦτον μὲν οὖν] 'him then,' the clause being answered by πέποιθα δὲ ὅτι καὶ αὐτὸς ἐλεύσομαι (ver. 24), while ἐξαυτῆς is matched by ταχέως.

ὡς ἂν...ἐξαυτῆς] 'at once when.' For ὡς ἂν temporal comp. Rom. xv. 24, 1 Cor. xi. 34.

ἀφίδω] So ἀφορῶντες Heb. xii. 2. If any weight is to be attached to the agreement of the older MSS, the aspirated form (ἀφίδω for ἀπίδω) must be read here. In Acts ii. 7 (οὐχ or οὐχὶ ἰδού) and in Acts iv. 29 (ἐφίδε) they are divided. In the three principal MSS of the LXX, so far as I have noticed, the following instances of aspirates in compounds of εἶδον occur: Gen. xvi. 13, ἐφίδαν A; Gen. xxxi. 49, ἐφίδοι A; Ps. xxx. 8, ἐφειδες A; Ps. xci. 12, ἐφιδεν A; Ps. cxi. 8, ἐφιδη N; Jer. xxxi. 19, ἐφιδε N; Jonah iv. 5, ἀφειδη N; 1 Mac. iii. 59, ἐφιδειν N A; 2 Macc. i. 27, ἐφειδε (for ἐπιδε imper.) A; 2 Macc. viii. 2, ἐφιδειν (ἐφιδῷ) A; Deut. xxvi. 15, καθιδε B; Judith vi. 19, καθειδε (for κατιδε) A. It must be remembered that in the Vatican MS ἐμέ, ἐξαντῆς· ²⁴πέποιθα δὲ ἐν κυρίῳ ὅτι καὶ αὐτὸς τα-χέως ἐλεύσομαι [πρὸς ὑμᾶς]. ²⁵ἀναγκαῖον δὲ ἡγησάμην Ἐπαφρόδιτον τὸν ἀδελφὸν καὶ συνεργὸν καὶ συνστρατιώτην μου, ὑμῶν δὲ ἀπόστολον καὶ λειτουργὸν τῆς almost all the book of Genesis is lost and that the Sinaitic contains less than half of the Old Testament. The collations of other mss in Holmes' and Parsons' LXX supply many additional examples both in these and other passages. Similarly ελπις is sometimes preceded by an aspirate (ἀφελπίζοντες Luke vi. 35, ἐφ' ἐλπίδι, Rom. viii. 20, 1 Cor. ix. 10, ἀφελπικῶς Hermas Vis. iii. 12); when naturalised in Coptic it is always so written, and we frequently find Helpis as a proper name in Latin. In both cases the anomaly is supported by inscriptions: ΕΦΕΙΔΕ Boeckh no. 3333; ΗΕΛΠΙΔΑ no. 170; the latter being as old as the 5th century B.C. The aspirates are doubtless to be explained as remnants of the digamma, which both these words possessed: see Curtius Griech. Etym. pp. 217, 238 (2nd ed.). It is less easy to account for οὐχ ὀψεσθε Luke xvii. 22, οὐχ ὀλίγος Acts xii. 18 (in which passages however the aspirate is not well supported), though there are some indications that ὀπτομαι had a digamma. On οὐχ Ἰουδαϊκῶς, Gal. ii. 14, see the note there.

24. With St Paul's language here compare 1 Cor. iv. 17, 19, ἐπεμψα ὑμῖν Τιμόθεον ὃς ἐστίν μου τέκνον κ.τ.λ. ἐλεύσομαι δὲ ταχέως πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἐὰν ὁ κύριος θελήσῃ.

ταχέως] If the view taken in the introduction (p. 31 sq.) of the date of this epistle be correct, St Paul's release was delayed longer than he at this time expected. We have a choice between supposing him disappointed in the anticipation expressed here or in the anticipation implied in the injunction to Philemon (ver. 22).

25—30. 'Meanwhile, though I purpose sending Timotheus shortly, though

I trust myself to visit you before very long, I have thought it necessary to despatch Epaphroditus to you at once; Epaphroditus, whom you commissioned as your delegate to minister to my needs, in whom I have found a brother and a fellow-labourer and a comrade in arms. I have sent him, because he longed earnestly to see you and was very anxious and troubled that you had heard of his illness. Nor was the report unfounded. He was indeed so ill that we despaired of his life. But God spared him in His mercy; mercy not to him only but to myself also, that I might not be weighed down by a fresh burden of sorrow. For this reason I have been the more eager to send him, that your cheerfulness may be restored by seeing him in health, and that my sorrow may be lightened by sympathy with your joy. Receive him therefore in the Lord with all gladness, and hold such men in honour; for in his devotion to the work, he was brought to death's door, hazarding his life, that he might make up by his zeal and diligence the lack of your personal services to supplement your charitable gift.'

25. ἀναγκαῖον κ.τ.λ.] The same expression occurs 2 Cor. ix. 5. ἡγησάμην is here the epistolary aorist, like ἐπεμψα (ver. 28); for Epaphroditus seems to have been the bearer of the letter. See the introduction p. 36 and the note on Gal. vi. 11.

Ἐπαφρόδιτον] On Epaphroditus see the introduction p. 60 sq. He is not mentioned except in this epistle. The name (corresponding in meaning to the Latin 'venustus') was extremely common in the Roman period. It was assumed by the dictator Sylla himself in χρείας μου, πέμψαι πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ²⁶ἐπειδὴ ἐπιποθῶν ἦν πάντας ὑμᾶς, καὶ ἀδελφῶν, διότι ἠκούσατε ὅτι ἡσθένησεν. ²⁷καὶ γὰρ ἡσθένησεν παραπλήσιον θανάτῳ· ἀλλὰ writing to the Greeks (Λεύκιος Κορνήλιος Σύλλας Ἐπαφρόδιτος, Plut. Syll. 34; comp. Appian. Civ. i. 97). It was borne by a freedman of Augustus (Dion Cass. li. 11, 13); by a favourite of Nero, likewise a freedman (Tac. Ann. xv. 55 etc.); by a grammarian of Chæroneia residing at Rome during this last emperor's reign (Suidas s. v.); by a patron of literature (possibly the same with one of those already mentioned) who encouraged Josephus (Antiq. proœm. 2, Vit. 76). The name occurs very frequently in inscriptions both Greek and Latin, whether at full length Epaphroditus, or in its contracted form Epaphras.

ἀδελφὸν κ.τ.λ.] The three words are arranged in an ascending scale; common sympathy, common work, common danger and toil and suffering. Συνστρατιώτης occurs again Philem. 2. The metaphor is naturally very common: see esp. 2 Cor. x. 3, 4, 1 Tim. i. 18, 2 Tim. ii. 3, 4.

ὑμῶν δέ] This prominent position is given to ὑμῶν, both to contrast it with the immediately preceding μου, and to bind together the words following; for ἀπόστολον καὶ λειτουργὸν τῆς χρείας μου form one idea, 'a messenger sent to minister to my need.' Epaphroditus was the bearer of the contributions from Philippi (iv. 18), which just below are designated λειτουργία (ver. 30): comp. Rom. xv. 27 ἐν τοῖς σαρκικοῖς λειτουργῆσαι αὐτοῖς. For this sense of ἀπόστολος, 'a delegate or messenger of a church,' see 2 Cor. viii. 23 ἀπόστολοι ἐκκλησιῶν. The interpretation which makes Epaphroditus an apostle or bishop of Philippi will be considered in the dissertation on the Christian ministry.

τῆς χρείας μου] as iv. 16; comp. Acts xx. 34, Rom. xii. 13.

26. ἐπιποθῶν] 'eagerly longing after': see the note on i. 8. Here the expression is still further intensified by the substitution of ἐπιποθῶν ἦν for ἐπεπόθει. While the external evidence for and against ἰδεῖν is very evenly balanced, the language seems to gain in force by the omission. It may have been added because ἐπιποθεῖν ἰδεῖν was a well-remembered expression in St Paul; Rom. i. 11, 1 Thess. iii. 6, 2 Tim. i. 4.

ἀδελφῶν] 'distressed.' The word is used in connexion with ἀπορεῖν, λυγρῶν (Plato Theæt. p. 175 D), with ξεινοπαθεῖν (Plut. Mor. 601 c), and the like. It describes the confused, restless, half-distracted state, which is produced by physical derangement, or by mental distress, as grief, shame, disappointment, etc. For its sense here comp. Dion. Hal. A. R. i. 56 ἀδελμοὶν τῷ ἀνδρὶ καὶ παρεκίττι τὸ σῶμα ὑπὸ λύπης. The derivation of ἀδελμονεῖν suggested by Buttmann (Lexil. p. 29), from ἀδμος 'away from home' and so 'beside oneself' (in which however he seems not to have been aware that he was anticipated by Photius Lex. p. 9: see Steph. Thes. s. v.), is almost universally accepted. But to say nothing else, the form of the word is a serious obstacle; and Lobeck, Pathol. pp. 160, 238, is probably right in returning to the older derivation ἀδήμων, ἀδήσαι. In this case the primary idea of the word will be loathing and discontent. The word occurs in Symmachus, Ps. cxv. 2 (ἐν τῇ ἐκστάσει LXX), Ps. lx. 2 (ἀκηδιάσαι LXX), Eccl. vii. 16 (ἐκπλαγῆς LXX); and in Aquila, Job xviii. 20 (ἐστέναν LXX).

27. καὶ γάρ] 'for indeed.' The καὶ implies that the previous ἡσθένησεν understates the case.

ὁ Θεὸς ἠλέησεν αὐτόν, οὐκ αὐτὸν δὲ μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐμέ, ἵνα μὴ λύπην ἐπὶ λύπην σχῶ. ²⁸ σπουδαιοτέρως οὖν ἔπεμψα αὐτόν, ἵνα ἰδόντες αὐτὸν πάλιν χαρῇτε, καὶ γὰρ ἀλυπότερος ὦ. ²⁹ προσδέχεσθε οὖν αὐτὸν ἐν κυρίῳ μετὰ πάσης χαρᾶς, καὶ τοὺς τοιούτους ἐντίμους ἔχετε, ³⁰ ὅτι ἐπὶ λύπην] So all the best copies, while the received text reads ἐπὶ λύπῃ. In such cases the dative is more common in classical authors, but the accusative is supported by several passages in the LXX, e.g. Ezech. vii. 26 ἀγγελία ἐπὶ ἀγγελίαν, Ps. lxviii. 28 ἀνομίαν ἐπὶ τὴν ἀνομίαν, Is. xxviii. 10 (where both constructions are combined) θλίψιν ἐπὶ θλίψιν, ἐλπίδα ἐπ' ἐλπίδι. Comp. Matt. xxiv. 2, and see A. Buttman p. 291.

28. σπουδαιοτέρως] 'with increased eagerness' on account of this circumstance: see for the comparative Winer § xxxv. p. 257, and compare the note on περισσοτέρως i. 14.

ἐπεμψα] i. e. with the letter, as in Ephes. vi. 22, Col. iv. 8, Philem. 11, and perhaps also 2 Cor. ix. 3. On this aorist see above, ver. 25.

πάλιν χαρῇτε] 'may recover your cheerfulness,' which had been marred by the news of Epaphroditus' illness: for the order suggests the connexion of πάλιν with χαρῇτε rather than with ἰδόντες.

ἀλυπότερος ὦ] 'my sorrow may be lessened.' The expression is purposely substituted for πάλιν χαρῶ, for a prior sorrow will still remain unremoved; comp. ver. 27 λύπην ἐπὶ λύπην.

29. προσδέχεσθε κ.τ.λ.] comp. Rom. xvi. 2.

30. τὸ ἔργον] Comp. Acts xv. 38 Παῦλος δὲ ἠξίου τὸν ἀποστάνα ἀπ' αὐτῶν ἀπὸ Παμφυλίας καὶ μὴ συνελθόντα αὐτοῖς εἰς τὸ ἔργον, μὴ συναγαγάνειν τοῦτον, where we seem to have St Paul's very words. So too Ignat. Ephes. 14 οὐ γὰρ ἐπαγγελίας τὸ ἔργον, Rom. 3 οὐ πεισμονῆς τὸ ἔργον ἀλλὰ μεγέθους ἐστὶν ὁ χριστιανισμός.

Thus τὸ ἔργον is used absolutely, like ἡ ὁδός, τὸ θέλημα, τὸ ὄνομα (see on ver. 9), etc. Though one only of the oldest MSS has τὸ ἔργον alone, this must be the correct reading. The others add κυρίου, Χριστοῦ, τοῦ κυρίου, τοῦ Χριστοῦ, or τοῦ Θεοῦ, of which the two first are highly supported; but the authorities, being very evenly divided, neutralise each other. All alike are insertions to explain τὸ ἔργον.

παραβολευσάμενος] 'having gambled with his life.' From παραβάλλεσθαι, to throw down a stake, to make a venture (e.g. Polyb. ii. 94. 4 οὐδαμῶς κρίνων ἔκκυβέειν οὐδὲ παραβάλλεσθαι τοῖς ὅλοις) comes παράβολος, 'gambler, rash, reckless,' whence παραβολεῖσθαι 'to play the gambler,' formed on the analogy of ἀσπτεῦσθαι, διαλεκτικεῦσθαι, πεπερεύεσθαι, πονηρεῦσθαι, 'to play the spendthrift, quibbler, braggart, scoundrel, etc.': see Lobeck Phryn. p. 67. With the use here compare the ecclesiastical sense of parabolani, brotherhoods who at the risk of their lives nursed the sick and buried the dead. For the expression compare Diod. Sic. iii. 35 ἔκριναν παραβαλέσθαι ταῖς ψυχαῖς, Hom. II. ix. 322 αἰεὶ ἐμὴν ψυχὴν παραβάλλομενος. While παραβάλλεσθαι takes either an accusative or a dative of the thing stated, παραβολεῖσθαι from its nature can have only the latter. The original meaning of the English word 'hazard' is the same, 'a game of chance': see for the derivation Diez Etymol. Worterb. der Rom. Spr. p. 33 s. v. azzardo, E. Müller Etym. Worterb. der Eng. Spr. s. v. No one who has felt the nervous vigour of St Paul's style will hesitate between παρα-διὰ τὸ ἔργον μέχρι θανάτου ἤγγισεν παραβολευσάμενος τῇ ψυχῇ, ἵνα ἀναπληρώσῃ τὸ ὑμῶν ὑστέρημα τῆς πρὸς με λειτουργίας.

III. Ἐν τοῖς λοιποῖς, ἀδελφοί μου, χαίρετε ἐν κυρίῳ.

βολευσάμενος and παραβολευσάμενος. The latter, which would mean 'having consulted amiss,' stands in the received text: but the evidence is strongly in favour of the former. Both words alike are very rare.

ἀναπληρώσῃ κ.τ.λ.] as in 1 Cor. xvi. 17 χαίρω ἐπὶ τῇ παρουσίᾳ Στεφάνου κ.τ.λ. ὅτι τὸ ὑμέτερον ὑστέρημα αὐτοὶ ἀνεπλήρωσαν: comp. Clem. Rom. § 38 δι' οὗ ἀναπληρώθῃ αὐτοῦ τὸ ὑστέρημα. So also ἀνταναπληροῦν in Col. i. 24 and προσαναπληροῦν in 2 Cor. xi. 9.

τὸ ὑμῶν ὑστέρημα κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'what your services towards me lacked to be complete,' in other words 'your personal ministrations,' as in 1 Cor. xvi. 17 just quoted. It seems plain from this expression that Epaphroditus' illness was the consequence not of persecution but of over-exertion.

III. 1. 'And now, my brethren, I must wish you farewell. Rejoice in the Lord. Forgive me, if I speak once more on an old topic. It is not irksome to me to speak, and it is safe for you to hear.'

τὸ λοιπόν] 'for the rest,' i.e. 'finally, in conclusion.' With λοιπόν or τὸ λοιπόν St Paul frequently ushers in the concluding portion of his letters containing the practical exhortations; 1 Thess. iv. 1, 2 Thess. iii. 1, 2 Cor. xiii. 11, Ephes. vi. 10 (where however τοῦ λοιποῦ should probably be read). Sometimes this concluding portion is prolonged, as in the First Epistle to the Thessalonians, where it extends over two chapters. In the present instance the letter is interrupted, a fresh subject is introduced, the conclusion is for a time forgotten, and St Paul resumes his farewell injunctions later at iv. 8 τὸ λοιπόν, ἀδελφοί κ.τ.λ. See the introduction, p. 68 sq.

In other passages λοιπόν and τὸ λοιπόν occur in reference to the approaching end of all things; as 1 Cor. vii. 29 ὁ καιρὸς συνεσταλμένος ἐστίν, τὸ λοιπόν ἵνα κ.τ.λ., Ign. Ephes. 11, Smyrn. 9.

χαίρετε] 'farewell.' At the same time the word conveys an injunction to rejoice; see ii. 18, iv. 4, and the note on the latter passage.

τὰ αὐτὰ] 'the same things.' But to what does St Paul refer? To his own personal intercourse with the Philippians? To messages delivered by his delegates? To previous letters not now extant? To some topic contained in this present epistle? The expression itself τὰ αὐτὰ γράφειν seems to limit the range of choice to written communications. The theory of an earlier letter or letters, which seems to be supported by an expression of Polycarp (§ 3 ἀπὸν ὑμῖν ἔγραψεν ἐπιστολάς), will be considered in the detached note. At present it is sufficient to say that if the epistle itself supplies the requisite allusion, it is much more naturally sought here than elsewhere. On what subject then does this epistle dwell repeatedly?

Two answers will suggest themselves. (1) The duty of rejoicing. This topic is very prominent in the epistle: see the note on i. 4. It has occurred more than once already. It has the advantage also of appearing in the immediate context, χαίρετε ἐν κυρίῳ. Nevertheless it seems inadequate to explain St Paul's language here. Such an injunction has no very direct bearing on the safety of the Philippians; its repetition could hardly be suspected of being irksome to the Apostle. The words seem obviously to refer to some actual or threatened evil, against which a reiterated warn-τὰ αὐτὰ γράφειν ὑμῖν ἐμοὶ μὲν οὐκ ὀκνηρόν, ὑμῖν δὲ ἀσφαλές.

ing was necessary. (2) Such an evil existed in the disensions among the Philippians. This topic either directly or indirectly has occupied a very considerable portion of the letter hitherto; and it appears again more than once before the close: see the introduction p. 66 sq. It is the Apostle's practice to conclude with a warning against the prevailing danger of his correspondents. The Corinthians are again reminded that 'the Lord cometh' (1 Cor. xvi. 22); the Galatians are told once more that 'circumcision is nothing and uncircumcision is nothing' (Gal. vi. 15); the Thessalonians receive a parting injunction against the spirit of restlessness and disorder spreading among them (1 Thess. v. 14, 2 Thess. iii. 14). The Apostle therefore would naturally lay stress on this point here, intending, as he appears to have done, to bring his letter to a speedy close. See the note on iii. 2.

ὀκνηρόν] 'irksome, tedious.' The word generally signifies 'dilatory, sluggish,' as in the LXX frequently; but here it is active, 'causing ὄκνος,' as in Soph. Œd. T. 834 ἡμῖν μὲν, ὄναξ, ταῦτ' ὀκνηρά.

The synonymes μορφή and σχῆμα¹.

The word σχῆμα corresponds exactly in derivation, though but partially in meaning, to the old English 'haviour.' In its first sense it denotes the figure, shape, fashion, of a thing. Thence it gathers several derived meanings. It gets to signify, like the corresponding Latin 'habitus,' sometimes the dress or costume (as Aristoph. Eq. 1331 τετυγοφόρος ἀρχαίῳ σχήματι λαμπρός), sometimes the attitude or demeanour (as Eur. Ion 238 τρόπων τεκμήριον τὸ σχῆμ' ἔχεις τόδε). It is used also for a 'figure of speech,' as the dress in which the sense clothes itself or the posture which the language assumes. It signifies moreover pomp, display, outward circumstance (as Soph. Ant. 1169 τύραννον σχῆμ' ἔχων), and frequently semblance, pretence, as opposed to reality, truth (as Plat. Epin. p. 989 οὐ σχήμασι τεχνάζοντας ἀλλὰ ἀληθείᾳ τιμώντας ἀρετήν, Plut. Vit. Galb. 15 ἀνήσεως σχῆμα τὴν ἀναβολὴν εἶναι φάσκοντες, Eur. Fragm. Æol. 18 οὐδὲν ἄλλο πλὴν ὄχλος καὶ σχῆμα). Altogether it suggests the idea of something changeable, fleeting, unsubstantial.

Μορφή, like σχῆμα, originally refers to the organs of sense². If σχῆμα and of may be rendered by 'figure,' 'fashion,' μορφή corresponds to 'form.' It comprises all those sensible qualities, which striking the eye lead to the conviction that we see such and such a thing. The conviction indeed may be false, for the form may be a phantom; but to the senses at all events the representation of the object conceived is complete. The word has not and cannot have any of those secondary senses which attach to σχῆμα, as gesture or dress or parade or pretext. In many cases indeed the words are used convertibly, because the sense is sufficiently lax to include either. But the difference between the two is tested by the fact that the μορφή of a definite thing as such, for instance of a lion or a tree, is one only, while its σχῆμα may change every minute. Thus we often find μορφῆς σχῆμα, as in Latin 'figura formæ³,' but rarely, if ever, σχήματος μορφή (Eur. Iph. Taur. 292 οὐ ταυτὰ μορφῆς σχήματα, Ion 992 ποῖόν τι μορφῆς σχήμα;). The σχῆμα is often an accident of the μορφή.

¹ The following note is founded on some remarks which appeared several years ago (in the Journal of Class. and Sacr. Philol. no. vii. p. 113 sq., 121), enlarged and modified. The distinction of μορφή and σχῆμα has since been drawn out by Archbishop Trench (N.T. Syn. 2nd ser. § xx) in his pointed and instructive manner.

² I have purposely avoided the question of its derivation, feeling that I have no right to an opinion on the subject. Benfey, Wurzel-lex. ii. p. 309, connects it with the Sanscrit 'varpas,' 'form.'

³ As e.g. Lucr. iv. 69 'formai servare figuram.' Compare the account of 'forma' and 'figura' given by Döderlein, Lat. Syn. iii. p. 25 sq. (referred to by Trench, l. c. p. 93). His distinction corresponds to that which is here given of μορφή and σχῆμα. 'The form (Gestalt), he says, 'so far as it has definite outlines is figura; so far as it is the visible impression and the stamp of the inner being and corresponds thereto, it is forma.'

Its philosophical meaning.

Plato.

Aristotle.

From the primary popular sense of μορφή we pass to its secondary philosophical meaning. And here the older philosophers do not render much assistance. In Parmenides indeed (μορφὰς γὰρ κατέθεντο δύο, ver. 112 Karsten) the word signifies 'natures,' 'essences,' for he is speaking of two elemental principles of the universe. But without the light thrown upon its use here by the phraseology of later thinkers, no inference could safely be drawn from this solitary instance. In Plato we first meet with a clear example of its philosophical sense. In the Phædo (p. 103 E, 104 A) Socrates, eliciting the doctrine of ideas by question and answer after his wont, concludes that 'not only is the same name always claimed for the *εἶδος*¹ itself, but also for something else which is not the εἶδος and yet has its μορφή always whenever it exists.' And in illustration of his meaning he adduces the example of the odd and the number three, the latter being always called odd and being inseparable from oddness, though not the odd itself. Thus in Plato's language the μορφή is the impress of the idea on the individual, or in other words the specific character. It need not therefore denote any material sensible quality, as in the instance quoted it does not. In Plato however the philosophical sense of μορφή is very rare. On the other hand Aristotle uses it commonly. But its relation to εἶδος has undergone a change, corresponding to the difference in his metaphysical views. As he discards Plato's doctrine of ideas wholly, as he recognises no eternal self-existent archetype distinct from the specific character exhibited in the individuals, it follows as a matter of course that with him εἶδος and μορφή are identical. There are, according to his teaching, two elements or principles or causes of things; the matter, the substratum supporting the qualities, and the form, the aggregate of the qualities². The form he calls indifferently εἶδος or *μορφή*³. He moreover designates it by various synonymes. It is sometimes 'the abstract conception realised' (*τὸ τί ᾗν εἶναι*⁴), sometimes 'the essence corresponding to the definition' (ἡ οὐσία ἡ κατὰ τὸν λόγον),

¹ Here the εἶδος is plainly the ἰδέα. Plato seems to have used both words alike to denote the eternal archetype, as for instance in the passages in Trendelenburg, Platon. de ideis doct. p. 33 sqq. Where however especial accuracy was aimed at, ἰδέα would naturally be preferred to εἶδος: see Thompson's note on Archer Butler's Lectures II, p. 128.

² A large number of passages is collected by Waitz, Organon II. p. 401 sq. See also Heyder Aristot. u. Hegel. Dialektik p. 182 sq., and especially Ritter and Preller Hist. Phil. p. 324 sq. (ed. 2). In other places Aristotle speaks of four causes, the efficient, the material, the formal, and the final. The final and the efficient causes however may be conceived as involved in the formal: see esp. G. Schneider, De Causa sometimes 'the definition of the essence' (ὁ λόγος τῆς οὐσίας), sometimes 'the definition' alone, sometimes 'the essence' alone. He calls it also 'the actuality' (ἐνέργεια) or 'the perfection' (ἐντελέχεια)¹, matter being designated 'the potentiality' (δύναμις). 'So rich in wealth and titles,' said a later writer of a rival school half in irony, 'is the εἶδος with Aristotle².' The significance of his μορφή or εἶδος will appear also from the fact that he elsewhere identifies it with the final cause (τέλος or οὐ ἕνεκα)³, because the end or purpose is implicitly contained in the qualities. It is still more evident from the intimate connexion which he conceives to exist between the form and the nature. 'The term nature,' he says, 'is used to signify three things; sometimes it is equivalent to the matter, sometimes to the form, sometimes to both combined. Of the nature according to matter and the nature according to form, the latter is the more influential (κυριωτέρα)⁴,' i.e. it has a more important function in making the thing what it is.

Finali Aristotelea (Berol. 1865), p. 15 sq.

³ See Waitz Organon II. p. 405. There are exceptional cases where either word is used in its popular rather than its philosophical sense, referring directly to the organs of vision: but Biese, die Philosophie des Aristoteles I. p. 439, is not justified in his general distinction that μορφή is 'die äusserliche sichtbare Form der Dinge,' and εἶδος 'das die Dinge von innen heraus Gestaltende.' This distinction may suit one passage, but it is contradicted by twenty others. The same remark applies to the attempts made by the old commentators on Aristotle to distinguish μορφή and εἶδος.

⁴ On this term see Trendelenburg, Rhein. Mus. II. p. 457 sq., esp. pp. 469, 481 (1828); comp. his note on de Anima I. 1, 2, p. 192 sq.

It will appear moreover from this account, that the term μορφή, though originally derived from the organs of sense like εἶδος, and referring to external conformation, has in the language of Aristotle a much wider application, being not only applied to physical qualities generally, but also extended to immaterial objects. Thus he says in one passage that skin, vein, membrane, and all such things, belong to the same μορφή⁵; in another, that courage and justice and prudence have the same μορφή in a state as in an individual⁶; in a third, that science and health may be called the μορφή and εἶδος of the scientific and the healthy respectively⁷; while in a fourth, criticising the saying of Democritus that 'anybody could see what was the form (μορφή) of a man,' meaning that he might be known by his shape and colour, he replies that 'a corpse has the form (μορφή) of the human shape (σχήματος) and yet nevertheless is not a man⁸.' The form of a man therefore in Aristotle's conception was something more than his sensible appearance.

This sense of μορφή, as the specific character, was naturally transmitted from these great original thinkers to the philosophers of later ages. It is found for instance in Plutarch⁹. It appears very definitely in the Neopla-

Later
philosophers.

¹ On the form regarded as the ἐνέργεια and the ἐντελέχεια see Trendelenburg de Anima ii. 1, p. 295 sq.

² A Platonist in Stobæus Ecl. i. c. 13 οὕτως αὐτῷ πλουσίον τε καὶ πολυώνυμόν ἐστι τὸ εἶδος.

³ See Schneider de Caus. Fin. Aristot. p. 10 sq. and the passages quoted p. 12.

⁴ Phys. Ausc. ii. 1, p. 192 A (Bekker), de Part. An. i. 1, p. 640 B. See below, note 8.

⁵ de Anim. Gen. ii. 3, p. 737 B.

⁶ Polit. vii. 1, p. 1323 B.

⁷ de Anima ii. 2, p. 414 A.

⁸ de Part. An. i. 1, p. 640 B, ἡ γὰρ κατὰ τὴν μορφήν φύσις κυριωτέρα τῆς ὀλικῆς φύσεως. εἰ μὲν οὖν τῷ σχήματι καὶ τῷ χρώματι ἑκαστόν ἐστι τῶν τε ζώων καὶ τῶν μορίων, ὁρθῶς ἂν Δημόκριτος λέγοι· φαίνεται γὰρ οὕτως ὑπολαβεῖν. φησὶ γοῦν παντὶ δῆλον εἶναι ὅλον τι τὴν μορφήν ἐστὶν ὁ ἄνθρωπος, ὡς ὅντος αὐτοῦ τῷ τε σχήματι καὶ τῷ χρώματι γνωρίμου. καίτοι καὶ ὁ τεθνεὺς ἔχει τὴν αὐτὴν τοῦ σχήματος μορφήν, ἀλλ' ὅμως οὐκ ἐστὶν ἄνθρωπος (i.e. the corpse has the μορφή of the human σχῆμα, but it has not the μορφή of a man).

⁹ Mor. p. 1013 C αὐτὸς τε γὰρ ὁ κόσμος οὗτος καὶ τῶν μερῶν ἑκαστον αὐτοῦ συνέστηκεν ἐκ τε σωματικῆς οὐσίας καὶ νοητῆς, ὣν ἡ μὲν ὕλην καὶ ὑποκείμενον, ἡ δὲ μορφήν καὶ εἶδος τῷ γενομένῳ παρέσχε κ.τ.λ. Comp. p. 1022 E. For these references and the passage in the tonists¹. And what is more to our purpose, it is recognised by Philo, the chief representative of Alexandrian Judaism².

Popular
language.

Nor can it have been wholly without influence on the language of everyday life. Terms, like ideas, gradually permeate society till they reach its lower strata. Words stamped in the mint of the philosopher pass into general currency, losing their sharpness of outline meanwhile, but in the main retaining their impress and value. The exclusive technicalities of the scholastic logic are the common property of shopmen and artisans in our own day.

New Testament usage

Do we then find in the New Testament any distinction between μορφή and σχῆμα corresponding to that which appears to have held roughly in the common language of the Greeks and to have been still further developed in the technical systems of philosophers?

of μορφή

A review of the passages where σχῆμα and its derivatives are used will not, I think, leave any doubt on the mind that this word retains the notion of 'instability, changeableness,' quite as strongly as in classical Greek. Thus 'the fashion of this world,' which 'passeth away,' is τὸ σχῆμα τοῦ κόσμου τούτου (1 Cor. vii. 31). 'To fall in with the fashion of this world' is συνσχηματίζεσθαι τῷ αἰῶνι τούτῳ (Rom. xii. 2). 'To follow the capricious guidance of the passions' is συνσχηματίζεσθαι ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις (1 Pet. i. 14). The fictitious illusory transformation whereby evil assumes the mask of good—the false apostles appearing as the true, the prince of darkness as an angel of light, the ministers of Satan as ministers of righteousness—is described by the thrice repeated word μετασχηματίζεσθαι (2 Cor. xi. 13, 14, 15). The significance of σχῆμα will be felt at once, if in any of these passages we attempt to substitute μορφή in its stead³.

and σχῆμα.

On the other hand the great and entire change of the inner life, otherwise described as being born again, being created anew, is spoken of as a conversion of μορφή always, of σχῆμα never. Thus 'He fore-ordained them conformable (συμμόρφους) to the image of His Son' (Rom. viii. 29); 'Being made conformable (συμμορφιζόμενος) to His death' (Phil. iii. 10); 'We are transformed (μεταμορφούμεθα) into the same image' (2 Cor. iii. 18); 'To be transformed by the renewal of the mind' (Rom. xii. 2); 'Until Christ be formed (μορφωθῇ) in you' (Gal. iv. 19). In these passages again, if any one doubts whether μορφή has any special force, let him substitute σχῆμα and try the effect. In some cases indeed, where the organs of sense are concerned and where the appeal lies to popular usage, either word might be used. Yet I think it will be felt at once that in the account of the transfiguration μετα- next note I am indebted to Wyttenebach's note on Plato, Phæd. p. 103 E.

¹ See e.g. Plotin. Ennead. i. 6, p. 52 A, especially the expression οὐκ ἀνασχομένης τῆς ὕλης τὸ πάντα κατὰ τὸ εἶδος μορφοῦσθαι.

² de Vict. Off. § 13, p. 261 M, τὸ τεθλασμένον ἀφήρηται τὴν ποιότητα καὶ τὸ εἶδος καὶ οὐδὲν ἑτερόν ἐστιν ἢ κυρίως εἶπείν ἀμορφὸς ὕλη, and lower down, ταῖς ἀσωμάτοις δυνάμεσιν, ὧν ἔνυμον ὄνομα αἱ ἰδέαι, κατεχρήσατο πρὸς τὸ γένος ἕκαστον τὴν ἀρμόττουσαν λαβεῖν μορφήν. For other references see Dähne Jüdisch-Alex. Religionsphilosophie i. p. 185.

³ In 1 Cor. iv. 6 ταῦτα μετεσχημάτισα εἰς ἐμὰντὸν κ. τ. λ. the word refers to a rhetorical σχῆμα, and here μετεμόρφωσα would of course be out of place.

σχηματίζεσθαι would have been out of place and that μεταμορφοῦσθαι alone is adequate to express the completeness and significance of the change (Matt. xvii. 2, Mark ix. 2). Even in the later addition to St Mark's Gospel where our Lord is described as appearing to the two disciples ἐν ἑτέρᾳ μορφῇ, though μορφῇ here has no peculiar force, yet σχῆμα would perhaps be avoided instinctively, as it might imply an illusion or an imposture. It will be observed also that in two passages where St Paul speaks of an appearance which is superficial and unreal, though not using σχῆμα, he still avoids μορφῇ as inappropriate and adopts μόρφωσις instead (Rom. ii. 20 τὴν μόρφωσιν τῆς γνώσεως καὶ τῆς ἀληθείας, 2 Tim. iii. 5 μόρφωσιν εὐσεβείας). Here the termination denotes the aiming after or affecting the μορφῇ.

And the distinction, which has thus appeared from the review of each word separately, will be seen still more clearly from those passages where they occur together. In Rom. xii. 2 μὴ συσχηματίζεσθαι τῷ αἵνῳ τούτῳ ἀλλὰ μεταμορφοῦσθαι τῇ ἀνακαινώσει τοῦ νοῦς the form of the sentence calls attention to the contrast, and the appropriateness of each word in its own connexion is obvious: 'Not to follow the fleeting fashion of this world, but to undergo a complete change, assume a new form, in the renewal of the mind.' On the other hand in Phil. iii. 21 μετασχηματίσει τὸ σῶμα τῆς ταπεινώσεως ἡμῶν σύμμορφον τῷ σώματι τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ, the difference is not obvious at first sight. The meaning however seems to be, 'will change the fashion of the body of our humiliation and fix it in the form of the body of His glory.' Here I think it will be clear that a compound of σχῆμα could not be substituted for σύμμορφον without serious detriment to the sense: while on the other hand μεταμορφώσει might possibly have stood for μετασχηματίσει¹.

I now come to the passage in the Epistle to the Philippians out of Phil. ii. 6, which this investigation has arisen. But before attempting to discover what is implied by μορφῇ Θεοῦ, it will be necessary to clear the way by disposing of a preliminary question. Does the expression ἐν μορφῇ Θεοῦ ὑπάρχων refer to the pre-incarnate or the incarnate Christ? Those who adopt the latter view for the most part explain the words of the supernatural or divine power and grace manifested by our Lord during His earthly ministry. Thus in ancient times the Ambrosian Hilary, 'Deus apparet, dum mortuos excitat, surdis reddit auditum, leprosos mundat, et alia': thus in a later age Erasmus, 'Ipsis factis se Deum esse declararet etc.'; and Luther, 'Dass göttliche Gestalt nichts anderes sei denn sich zeigen mit Worten und Werken gegen andere als ein Herr und Gott'². Against this view De Wette, though himself referring the expression to Christ incarnate, urges with justice that the point of time marked by ὑπάρχων is evidently prior to our Lord's actual ministry, Concurrence of the two words.

The pre-incarnate Christ is meant.

¹ Of the two words μετασχηματίζειν would refer to the transient condition from which, μεταμορφοῦν to the permanent state to which, the change takes place. Archbishop Trench however supposes that μετασχηματίζειν is here preferred to μεταμορφοῦν as expressing 'transition but no absolute solution of continuity,' the spiritual body being developed from the natural, as the butterfly from the caterpillar. N. T. Syn. 2nd ser. p. 91.

² Postill. ad. Epist. Domin. Palm. (xii. p. 630 ed. Hall.), quoted by De Wette.

the period of this ministry itself being a period of humiliation. He therefore explains it as describing the glory dwelling potentially in Christ, at the moment when He commenced His ministry. The meaning of St Paul, he thinks, is best illustrated by the account of the temptation (Matt. iv. 8), where our Lord rejects Satan's offer of 'all the kingdoms of the world and their glory.' At that moment and in that act of renunciation it might be said of Him that ἐν μορφῇ Θεοῦ ὑπάρχων οὐχ ἀπαγμὸν ἡγήσατο τὸ εἶναι ἴσα Θεῷ ἀλλὰ ἑαυτὸν ἐκέκωσεν. But this is quite as unsatisfactory as the explanation which he rejects. The point of time is clearly prior not only to our Lord's open ministry, but also to His becoming man. Even if the words μορφὴν δούλου λαβὼν did not directly refer to the incarnation, as they appear to do, nothing else can be understood by ἐν ὁμοιώματι ἀνθρώπων γενόμενος. We cannot suppose St Paul to have meant, that our Lord was not in the likeness of men before His baptism and ministry, and became so then for the first time. On the contrary all accounts alike agree in representing this (so far as regards His earthly life), as the turning-point when He began to 'manifest forth His glory (John ii. 11).' It was an exaggeration indeed when certain early heretics represented His baptism as the moment of His first assumption of Deity: but only by a direct reversal of the accounts in the Gospel could it be regarded in any sense as the commencement of His humanity. The whole context in St Paul clearly implies that the being born as man was the first step in His humiliation, as the death on the Cross was the last. In other words, it requires that ἐν μορφῇ Θεοῦ ὑπάρχων be referred to a point of time prior to the incarnation.

Thus
μορφῇ refers to the divine attributes.

This being so, what meaning must we attach to 'the form of God' in which our Lord pre-existed? In the Clementine Homilies St Peter is represented as insisting upon the anthropomorphic passages in the Scriptures and maintaining therefrom that God has a sensible form (μορφῇ). To the objection of his opponent that if God has a form (μορφῇ), He must have a figure, a shape (σχῆμα) also, the Apostle is made to reply by accepting the inference: 'God has a σχῆμα; He has eyes and hands and feet like a man; nevertheless He has no need to use them!'. Not such was St Paul's conception of God. Not in this sense could he speak of the μορφῇ, not in any sense could he speak of the σχῆμα, of Him who is 'King of kings and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality, who dwelleth in light unapproachable, whom no man hath seen or can see (1 Tim. vi. 15, 16).' It remains then that μορφῇ must apply to the attributes of the Godhead. In other words, it is used in a sense substantially the same which it bears in Greek philosophy². It suggests the same idea which is otherwise expressed in

¹ Clem. Hom. xvii. 3, 7, 8.

² A passage in Justin Martyr (Apol. i. 9) fairly illustrates the distinction of μορφῇ and σχῆμα in St Paul. He says that Christians do not believe the idols formed by men's hands to have the form (μορφῇ) of God; they have only the names and the shapes (σχήματα) of demons; the form of God is not of this kind (οὐ τοιαύτην ἔχει τὴν μορφὴν); His glory and form are ineffable (ἀρρητον δόξαν καὶ μορφὴν ἔχων). He thus appears to contrast the visible σχήματα of demons with the insensible immaterial μορφῇ of God. A corresponding distinction also seems to hold in the Pistis

St John by ὁ Λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ, in Christian writers of succeeding ages by υἱὸς Θεοῦ ὢν Θεός, and in the Nicene Creed by Θεὸς ἐκ Θεοῦ.

In accepting this conclusion we need not assume that St Paul consciously derived his use of the term from any philosophical nomenclature. There was sufficient definiteness even in its popular usage to suggest this meaning when it was transferred from the objects of sense to the conceptions of the mind. Yet if St John adopted λόγος, if St Paul himself adopted εἰκὼν, πρωτότοκος, and the like, from the language of existing theological schools, it seems very far from improbable that the closely analogous expression μορφή Θεοῦ should have been derived from a similar source. The speculations of Alexandrian and Gnostic Judaism formed a ready channel, by which the philosophical terms of ancient Greece were brought within reach of the Apostles of Christ.

Thus in the passage under consideration the μορφή is contrasted with General the σχῆμα, as that which is intrinsic and essential with that which is accidental and outward. And the three clauses imply respectively the true divine nature of our Lord (μορφή Θεοῦ), the true human nature (μορφή δούλου), and the externals of the human nature (σχήματι ὡς ἄνθρωπος)¹.

Different interpretations of οὐχ ἀρπαγμὸν ἡγήσατο.

It will appear from the notes, that two principal interpretations of οὐχ ἀρπαγμὸν ἡγήσατο have been proposed, depending on the different senses assigned to ἀρπαγμός. In the one the prominent idea is the assertion, in the other the surrender, of privileges. The one lays stress on the majesty, the other on the humility, of our Lord. These two interpretations may conveniently be considered side by side and discussed at greater length.

1. If ἀρπαγμός 'plundering' is taken to mean 'robbery,' 'usurpation,' (1) ἀρ- then the expression asserts that the equality with God was the natural possession, the inherent right, of our Lord. This interpretation suits the usage accounted for.

St Paul's

result.

Two interpretations

παγμός robbery.

Sophia, where both words occur several times, pp. 38, 184, 226, 246, 253, 272, 273, 274, 277; the former especially in the phrase ἀλήθεια μορφῆς opposed to similitude or copy (παράδειγμα, see p. 253), the latter in connexion with τύποι and παραδείγματα (see esp. 272 sq.).

¹ In the controversies of the fourth and fifth centuries great stress was laid by Catholic writers on the force of μορφή here. See for instance Hilary of Poitiers de Trin. viii. 45 (ii. p. 245) Psalms cxxxviii. (i. p. 569), Ambrose Epist. 46 (ii. p. 986), Greg. Nyss. c. Eunom. iv. p. 566 (ἡ δὲ μορφή τοῦ Θεοῦ ταῦτὸν τῇ οὐσίᾳ πάντως ἐστίν), and the commentators Victorinus, Ambrosiaster, Chrysostom, and Theodoret, on this passage. St Chrysostom especially discusses the matter at some length. It is not surprising that they should have taken this view, but they could hardly have insisted with such confidence on the identity of μορφή and οὐσία, unless they had at least a reasonable case on their side. I trust the investigation in the text will show that their view was not groundless, though their language might be at times overstrained.

The context lost sight of.

words themselves well enough, when isolated from their context, and so far is free from objection. But it takes no account of the clauses which immediately precede and follow. (1) It neglects the foregoing words. For the Apostle is there enforcing the duty of humility, and when he adds 'Have the mind which was in Jesus Christ,' we expect this appeal to our great Example to be followed immediately by a reference, not to the right which He claimed, but to the dignity which He renounced. The dislocation of thought caused by this interpretation is apparent; 'Be ye humble and like-minded with Christ, who partaking of the divine nature claimed equality with God.' The mention of our Lord's condescension is thus postponed too late in the sentence. (2) And again this interpretation wholly disregards the connexion with the words following. For in the expression οὐχ ἀρπαγμὸν ἡγήσατο κ.τ.λ. ἀλλὰ ἐαυτὸν ἐκένωσεν, the particles οὐχ and ἀλλὰ obviously correspond, 'not the one but the other'; so that ἐκένωσεν ἐαυτὸν must contain the idea which directly contrasts with ἀρπαγμὸν ἡγήσατο. On the other hand the interpretation in question renders ἀλλὰ as equivalent to ἀλλ' ὅμως. Besides being unnatural in itself after οὐχ, this rendering fails entirely to explain the emphatic position of ἀρπαγμὸν.

Influence
of the Latin Fathers.

This sense, which is adopted in our own English Version and has been extensively received in modern times, may probably be traced to the influence of the Latin Fathers, who interpreted the rendering of the Latin Version without reference to the original. The Latin phrase 'rapinam arbitrari' did not convey the secondary meaning which was at once suggested by ἀρπαγμὸν (ἄρπαγμα) ἡγεῖσθαι; nor perhaps would the Latin particles 'non...sed' bring out the idea of contrast so strongly as οὐχ...ἀλλά. At all events it should be noticed, that while this interpretation is most common (though not universal) among Latin writers, it is unsupported by a single Greek Father, unless possibly at a very late date.

Such is the interpretation of TERTULLIAN de Resurr. Carn. 6, adv. Prax. 7, adv. Marc. v. 20; of the AMBROSIAN HILARY here; of ST AMBROSE de Fid. ii. 8 (II. p. 483 ed. Bened.), 'Quod enim quis non habet, rapere conatur; ergo non quasi rapinam habebat æqualitatem cum Patre etc.'; of PRIMASIVS here; and above all of ST AUGUSTINE who again and again quotes and explains the passage in his Sermons, 92 (v. p. 500 ed. Bened.), 118 (p. 587), 183 (p. 875), 186 (p. 885), 213 (p. 937), 244 (p. 1019), 264 (p. 1075), 292 (p. 1170), 304 (p. 1235); comp. in Psalms. xc. (IV. p. 972). The distinctness, with which this interpretation was enunciated by the greatest teacher of the Western Church, would necessarily secure for it a wide reception.

(2) ἀρ-παγμὸς
'a prize.'

2. If on the other hand ἀρπαγμὸν ἡγεῖσθαι is considered equivalent to the common phrase ἄρπαγμα ἡγεῖσθαι, so that ἀρπαγμὸς will signify 'a prize,' 'a treasure,' then the logical connexion with the context before and after is strictly preserved: 'Be humble as Christ was humble: He, though existing before the worlds in the form of God, did not treat His equality with God as a prize, a treasure to be greedily clutched and ostentatiously displayed: on the contrary He resigned the glories of heaven.' The only objection to this rendering, the form ἀρπαγμὸς in place of ἄρπαγμα, has been considered in the notes.

This is the common and indeed almost universal interpretation of the Greek Fathers, who would have the most lively sense of the requirements of the language. So it is evidently taken in the earliest passage where! it is quoted, in the Epistle of the CHURCHES OF GAUL (Euseb. H. E. v. 2), where praising the humility of the martyrs they say ἐπὶ τοσούτον ζηλωταὶ καὶ μιμηταὶ Χριστοῦ ἐγένοντο, ὃς ἐν μορφῇ Θεοῦ ὑπάρχων οὐχ ἀρπαγμὸν ἡγήσατο τὸ εἶναι ἴσα Θεῷ, evidently thinking this clause to contain in itself a statement of His condescension. So ORIGIN clearly takes it; in Joann. vi. § 37 (iv. p. 156 D) μέχρι θανάτου καταβαίνειν ὑπὲρ ἀσεβῶν, οὐχ ἀρπαγμὸν ἡγούμενον τὸ εἶναι ἴσα Θεῷ, καὶ κενοῦν ἑαυτὸν κ.τ.λ.; in Matth. Comm. Ser. (iii. p. 916 c) 'Vere Jesus non rapinam arbitratus est esse se æqualem Deo, et non semel sed frequenter pro omnibus seipsum humiliavit'; in Rom. v. § 2 (iv. p. 553 A) 'Nec rapinam ducit esse se æqualem Deo, hoc est, non sibi magni aliquid deputat quod ipse quidem æqualis Deo et unum cum patre sit'; ib. x. § 7 (iv. p. 672 c) 'Christus non sibi placens nec rapinam arbitrans esse se æqualem Deo semetipsum exinanivit.' So again EUSEBIUS unmistakeably; Ecl. Proph. iii. 4 ἐγενήθη πένυς, οὐχ ἀρπαγμὸν ἡγούμενος τὸ εἶναι ἴσα Θεῷ ἀλλ' ἑαυτὸν ταπεινῶν κ.τ.λ.; Eccles. Theol. i. 13 (p. 57) προϋπάρχων, θεότητι πατρικῆς δόξης τετιμημένος· οὐ μὴν ἀρπαγμὸν ἡγούμενος τὸ εἶναι ἴσα Θεῷ ἑαυτὸν δ' οὖν κενώσας κ.τ.λ.; comp. ib. i. 20 (p. 94). So also THEODORE OF MOPSUESTIA (Raban. Maur. Op. vi. p. 488 B ed. Migne) 'Non magnam reputavit illam quæ ad Deum est æqualitatem et elatus in sua permansit dignitate, sed magis pro aliorum utilitate præelegit humiliora etc.'; and after him THEODORET, interpreting the passage, τὴν πρὸς τὸν πατέρα ἰσότητα ἔχων οὐ μέγα τοῦτο ὑπέλαβε. So moreover the PSEUDO-ATHANASIUS Hom. de Sem. (Athan. Op. ii. p. 49 ed. Bened.) χρισθεὶς δὲ ὁ Δαυεὶδ εἰς βασιλεία οὐχ ἅμα ἤρπασε τὴν βασιλείαν ἀλλ' ἠνείχετο πολλοῖς χρόνοις δουλεύων τῷ Σαουλ· καὶ ὁ σωτὴρ ἡμῶν γεννηθεὶς βασιλεὺς πρὸ τῶν αἰώνων... ἠνείχετο, οὐχ ἀρπαγμὸν ἡγήσατο τὸ εἶναι ἴσα Θεῷ κ.τ.λ. So in like manner ISIDORE OF PELUSIUM Epist. iv. 22 εἰ ἔρμαιον ἡγήσατο τὸ εἶναι ἴσον οὐκ ἂν ἑαυτὸν ἐταπεινώσεν... δοῦλος μὲν γὰρ καὶ ἐλευθερωθεὶς καὶ νίοθεσία τιμηθεὶς ἅτε ἀρπαγμα ἢ εὐρημα τὴν ἀξίαν ἡγησάμενος οὐδ' ἂν ὑποσταίῃ οἰκετικὸν ἔργον ἀνύσαι· ὁ δὲ γνήσιος υἱὸς κ.τ.λ.; and CYRIL OF ALEXANDRIA c. Jul. vi (vi. p. 195 ed. Aubert.) ὁ μὲν γὰρ τῶν ὅλων σωτὴρ καὶ κύριος, καίτοι μετὸν αὐτῷ τὸ ἐν μορφῇ καὶ ἰσότητι τῇ κατὰ πᾶν ὅτι οὖν ὁρᾶσθαι πρὸς τὸν πατέρα καὶ τοῖς τῆς θεότητος ἐναβρύνεσθαι θάκοις, οὐχ ἀρπαγμὸν ἡγήσατο κ.τ.λ. (where the καίτοι is decisive). In addition to this positive testimony it should be noticed, that throughout the important controversies of the fourth and fifth centuries it does not seem once to have occurred to any Greek Father to put forward the other explanation of the passage, though so eminently favourable to the orthodox belief¹.

¹ It is not clear what interpretation was adopted by Didymus of Alexandria de Trin. i. 26 (p. 73), Τί τῆς ἰσότητος ταύτης εὐρίσκεται ἀνίσον; οὐχ ἤρπασε γάρ, φησίν, οὐκ ἔλαβε τὸ ἴσον εἶναι τῇ φύσει τῷ Θεῷ καὶ πατρί· καὶ ὃ ὅ μὴ ὑπ' ἄλλου κενωθείς ἑαυτὸν δὲ κενώσας αὐθέντην δεσπότην ὁμοῦ καὶ

αἰδίων ἑαυτὸν ἀπέδειξεν: comp. ib. iii. 17 (p. 377). The expression οὐχ ἤρπασε however seems to point to an intermediate interpretation like the one adopted by Chrysostom: see below, p. 134. Nothing can be inferred from the language of St Basil adv. Eunom. iv (i. p. 294 E, 295 A).

Nor is the interpretation thus generally adopted by Greek writers confined to them alone. Some of the most acute and learned of the Latin fathers explain it in the same way.

Also by Hilary

Thus perhaps HILARY OF POITIERS de Trin. viii. 45 (II. p. 246 ed. Bened.) 'Non sibi rapiens esse se æqualem Deo, ad susceptionem se formæ servilis per obedientiam exinanivit...non tamen æqualem se Deo per rapinam existimans quamvis in forma Dei et æqualis Deo per Deum Deus signatus exstaret¹'; and more clearly JEROME ad Hedib. Q. 9 (Epist. 120, 1. p. 837) 'Pro quibus non rapinam arbitratus est se esse æqualem Deo sed semetipsum exinanivit'; see also his notes on Gal. iv. 12, v. 14².

and Je-
rome.

The two senses
compared.

In comparing these two interpretations, it will be seen that while the former makes οὐχ ἀρπαγμὸν ἡγήσατο a continuation and expansion of the idea already contained in ἐν μορφῇ Θεοῦ ὑπάρχων, 'He existed in the form of God and so did not think it usurpation to be equal with God'; the latter treats the words as involving a contrast to this idea, 'He existed in the form of God but nevertheless did not eagerly assert His equality with God.' In short the two interpretations of the clause, as I have said before, are directly opposed, inasmuch as the one expresses our Lord's assertion, the other His cession, of the rights pertaining to His divine majesty.

A middle course taken by Chrysostom.

And between these two explanations—the one which interprets ἀρπαγμὸν by ἀδικίαν, and the other which interprets it by ἔρμαιον—our choice must be made. A middle interpretation however was maintained by St Chrysostom, and has been adopted with more or less distinctness by others, especially in recent times. It agrees very nearly with the first in the sense assigned to ἀρπαγμός, and yet approaches to the second in the general drift of the clause. 'Being in the form of God, He did not consider that He was plundering, when He claimed equality with God. He did not therefore look upon His divine prerogatives as a booty of which He feared to be deprived and which therefore it was necessary to guard jealously. He reigned not as a tyrant but as a lawful sovereign. He could therefore divest himself of the outward splendours of His rank without fear³.'

Objection
to his explanation.

As an indirect doctrinal inference from the passage, this account is admissible; but as a direct explanation of its bearing, it is faulty because it understands too much, requiring links to be supplied which the connexion does not suggest and which interrupt the sequence of thought. All similar attempts to mediate between the two opposing explanations fail in the same way and tend only to confuse the interpretation of the passage.

Of the two explanations then, between which our choice lies, the con-

¹ Yet in another passage c. Const. Imper. § 19 (II. p. 577) he says, 'Non rapit quod erat Christus,' which points to the other sense of ἀρπαγμός. Perhaps he, like Chrysostom, adopted a middle interpretation combining features of both.

² This is probably the view also of Victorinus in his commentary on the passage, 'Ergo nunc Paulus, Non, in-quit, Christus rapinam credidit, id est, hoc sibi vindicavit, tantum habere voluit ut forma Dei esset, sed etiam se ipsum exinanivit etc.'; but his language is not distinct. See again his treatise c. Arium i. 9, Galland Bibl. Vet. Patr. viii. p. 155.

³ Op. xi. p. 245. I have abridged his explanation.

text, as I have shown, seems imperatively to require the second; and if authority count for anything, the list of names, by which it is maintained, sufficiently refutes the charge of being 'liable to grave suspicion on theological grounds.' We should do wisely however to consider its doctrinal bearing, without reference to authority.

Now while the other explanation directly asserts our Lord's divinity, this confessedly does not. Yet on the other hand the theological difference is only apparent. For, though we miss the direct assertion in this particular clause, the doctrine still remains. It is involved in the preceding words, for the 'pre-existence in the form of God,' as will appear I think from the last note, means substantially this. It is indirectly implied moreover in this very clause taken in connexion with the context. For how could it be a sign of humility in our Lord not to assert His equality with God, if He were not divine? How could such a claim be considered otherwise than arrogant and blasphemous, if He were only a man? If St Chrysostom's interpretation must be rejected as faulty and confused, his argument at least is valid; 'No one wishing to exhort to humility says, Be humble and think less of yourself than of your compeers (ἐλαττον φρόνει τῶν ὁμοτίμων), for such and such a person being a slave did not set himself up against his master; therefore imitate him. Nay, one might reply, here is a question not of humility, but of infatuation (ἀπονοίας)'; 'It is no humility for the inferior not to set himself up against his superior'; 'If being a man, He washed the feet of men, He did not empty, did not humble Himself; if being a man, He did not grasp at equality with God, He deserves no praise¹'.

One who refuses to claim some enviable privilege may be influenced by either of two motives, by a feeling of humility or by a sense of justice, according as he has or has not a right to this privilege. Those who hold humanitarian views of the Person of Christ necessarily take the latter view of the motive in this instance. The equality with God, they argue, was not asserted, because it would have been an act of usurpation to do so. To this view it may fairly be objected, that it overlooks the true significance of ἀρπαγμὸν (ἄρπαγμα) ἡγεῖσθαι, which as a recognised phrase is equivalent to ἔρματον ἡγεῖσθαι and therefore refers to the desirableness of the possession or acquisition. But its fatal condemnation is this, that it treats the clause as isolated and takes no account of the context. The act expressed by οὐχ ἀρπαγμὸν ἡγήσατο is brought forward as an example of humility, and can only be regarded as such, if the expression τὸ εἶναι ἴσα Θεῷ refers to rights which it was an act of condescension to waive².

¹ Op. xi. pp. 236, 237, 247.

² One other interpretation put forward by recent commentators deserves attention. Meyer (followed by Dean Alford), desirous of giving ἀρπαγμὸν the active sense which its termination suggests, translates the words, 'Did not look upon His being on an equality with God, as a means of self-enrichment.' In answer to the mechanical objection urged against this sense, that a state (τὸ εἶναι) cannot be regarded as an action (ἀρπαγμὸν), he justly appeals to 1 Tim. vi. 5 νομιζόντων πορισμὸν εἶναι τὴν εὐσέβειαν, which presents an exact parallel in this respect. This interpretation suits the context very fairly, but it seems to me to be somewhat strained; and the fact that ἀρπαγμα ἡγεῖσθαι (ποιεῖσθαι) is a common phrase mean-

Theological bearing of the interpretation adopted.

It does not favour humanitarian views.

Lost Epistles to the Philippians?

Supposed reference to such in the Epistle itself

It has been maintained by some, that a passage in the Epistle to the Philippians implies a more or less sustained correspondence between St Paul and his converts, so that the extant letter is only a single link in a long chain. 'To write the same things,' says St Paul, 'to me is not irksome, while for you it is safe.' The reference, it is urged, cannot be explained from the epistle itself, since it does not supply any topic which satisfies the two conditions, of occurring in the immediate context, and of being repeated elsewhere in the course of the letter.

and in Polycarp.

Moreover the inference thus suggested is thought to be confirmed by an allusion in the Epistle of Polycarp. Writing to these same Philippians, he says (§ 3); 'Neither I nor another like me can attain to the wisdom of the blessed and glorious Paul; who coming among you taught the word of truth accurately and surely before the men of that day; who also when absent wrote letters (ἐπιστολάς) to you, into which if ye search ye can be builded up unto the faith given to you.'

Probabilities considered.

Against this view no objection can be taken from the probabilities of the case. On the contrary it is only reasonable to suppose, that during the ten or eleven years which elapsed between the epoch of their conversion and the date of this epistle, the Apostle, ever overflowing with love and ever prompt to seize the passing opportunity, would have written not once or twice only to converts with whom his relations were so close and affectionate. And—to consider the broader question—if we extend our range of view beyond the Philippians to the many churches of his founding, if we take into account not these ten years only but the whole period of his missionary life, we can hardly resist the conclusion that in the epistles of our Canon we have only a part—perhaps not a very large part—of the whole correspondence of the Apostle either with churches or with individuals.

But, if there be any reluctance to allow that the letter of an inspired Apostle could have been permitted to perish, a moment's thought will dissipate the scruple. Any theory of inspiration, which would be consistent with historical fact, must find a place for this supposition. It is true of Him who 'spake as never man spake,' that if all His words had been preserved, 'the world itself could not contain the books that should be written.' Yet His recorded sayings may be read through in a very few hours. And on the ground of inspiration we cannot assuredly claim for the letters of the Apostle an immunity from the ravages of time, which was denied to ing 'to prize highly, to welcome eagerly,' and that ἀρπαγμὸν ἡγεῖσθαι (ποιεῖσθαι), wherever else it occurs, has also this sense, would appear to be decisive. Meyer indeed attempts to force his own meaning on ἀρπαγμὸν in the passage of Cyril, de Ador. i. p. 25, quoted above (in the notes, p. 109); but when this writer, speaking of Lot's renewal of the offer of hospitality when declined by the angels, describes this importunity by οὐχ ἀρπαγμὸν τὴν παραίτησιν ἐποιεῖτο, it is difficult to conceive that the phrase can mean anything else but 'did not eagerly close with, did not gladly welcome their refusal.'

the words of the Saviour Himself. The 'litera scripta' indeed has a firmer hold on life. But the difficulty of multiplying copies, the strife of parties within the Church, and the perils assailing the brotherhood from without, are sufficient to explain the loss of any documents in the earlier ages. And from the nature of the case the letters of the Apostles could not have been so highly prized by their contemporaries, as by later generations. History confirms the suggestion which reason makes, that the writings of the first teachers of the Gospel grew in importance, as the echo of their voice died away. A letter from a dear friend is a poor substitute for the free interchange of conversation. But when he is taken from us, we know not how to value his correspondence highly enough¹.

At all events indications are not wanting of other letters besides those which have been preserved for the instruction of the Church. The two short Epistles to the Thessalonians stand alone in a period which extends over at least twenty years before and after². Yet in one of these the Apostle calls attention to his mode of signature, as a guarantee of genuineness, which occurred 'in every epistle' written by him³. Such an expression would be conclusive, even if unsupported by other allusions, which suggest at least the suspicion that several letters may have passed between St Paul and his Thessalonian converts⁴. Again, his written communications with the Corinthians seem to have extended beyond the two extant epistles. In a passage in the First Epistle, according to the most probable interpretation, he directly alludes to a previous letter addressed to them⁵; and the acknowledgment of the Corinthians, which he elsewhere mentions, that his 'letters are weighty and powerful,' together with his own reply 'Such as we are by letters when absent etc.'⁶, cannot be explained quite satisfactorily (though the explanation might pass) by the single extant epistle written before this date. On the other hand the Indications of other lost letters. Thessalonica.

Corinth.

¹ Prof. Jowett, Epistles of St Paul i. p. 195 (2nd ed.), has an instructive essay on the probability of many epistles having been lost. With some of his special criticisms however I venture to disagree. He supposes for instance that 1 Cor. v. 9 refers to the First Epistle to the Corinthians itself, and that Col. iv. 16 does not refer to the Epistle to the Ephesians.

² Fourteen years at least, probably seventeen (see notes Gal. ii. 1), elapsed between St Paul's conversion and the third visit to Jerusalem (A.D. 51). The Epistles to the Corinthians, which probably follow next in order after the Epistles to the Thessalonians, were not written till A.D. 57, 58. Thus the whole period will be 20 or 23 years, according to the reckoning adopted.

³ 2 Thess. iii. 17.

⁴ 2 Thess. ii. 2, 15.

⁵ 1 Cor. v. 9 ἔγραψα ὑμῖν ἐν τῇ ἐπιστολῇ μὴ συναναμίγνυσθαι πόρνοις. The real difficulty in referring this allusion to the First Epistle itself lies not in ἔγραψα, which might be explained as an epistolary aorist, but in ἐν τῇ ἐπιστολῇ 'in my letter,' which is thus rendered meaningless: see Journal of Class. and Sac. Phil. II. p. 196 (note). Two independent reasons have probably conspired to promote the unnatural explanation by which it is referred to the First Epistle. (1) On theological grounds commentators have been unwilling to admit that an epistle of St Paul could have perished: while (2) they have been misled critically by the context, ver. 11 νῦν δὲ ἔγραψα κ.τ.λ., taking νῦν in its primary temporal sense, whereas it appears to mean, 'under these circumstances,' 'the world being what it is.'

⁶ 2 Cor. x. 10, 11.

[Laodicea.]

'letter from Laodicea,' which the Apostle directs the Colossians to procure and read¹, must not be classed among these lost letters, as there is very good reason for supposing that he there refers to the circular letter to the Asiatic Churches, sent to Laodicea as one of the great centres and thence communicated to the neighbouring town of Colossæ, but circulated in the Church at large through the metropolis of Asia and therefore generally known as the Epistle to the Ephesians. Whether to these lost letters to Thessalonica and to Corinth we are required to add one or more addressed to the Philippians, I propose now to consider. The general question has only been introduced to prepare the way for this investigation.

Explanations of Phil. iii. 1 examined.

1. The passage in the Epistle to the Philippians itself has been variously explained. Some have interpreted it 'to repeat in writing the same injunctions which I gave you myself by word of mouth,' or 'which I charged you by my messengers.' But such amplifications receive no encouragement from the words themselves, which mean simply 'to write the same things again and again.' To written communications therefore our attention must be confined.

Even with this limitation, three solutions are offered. Either (1) The extant epistle itself consists of two separate letters welded together; or (2) A lost letter must be assumed in which the same subject was introduced; or (3) The often repeated topic must be discovered in the extant letter. The first of these solutions has been already considered and set aside²; nor indeed does it contribute anything towards the interpretation of this passage (though it would explain the plural in Polycarp), for no new topic is introduced by the disintegration of the existing letter. The second might very fairly be accepted in default of a better: but there is nothing in the words which suggests a reference to any incident external to the letter itself, and it is therefore simpler not to look elsewhere for the allusion. The third view then seems preferable, if any topic can be found which satisfies the conditions. And in the notes on the passage I have attempted to show that such a topic is not wanting.

Allusion in Polycarp considered.

2. But the reference in the Epistle of Polycarp still remains to be explained. What account must be given of the 'letters,' which St Paul wrote to the Philippians? Does Polycarp, as some have thought, include the Thessalonian Epistles, which as being addressed to a neighbouring Church would be known and read at Philippi also? This is possible; but a simpler solution offers itself. Notwithstanding the plural ἐπιστολαί, the reference may be satisfied by the one extant Epistle to the Philippians. Of this usage of the plural ἐπιστολαί, applying to a single letter³, there can be no doubt. This will appear plainly from Thucyd. viii. 51 ὅσον οὐ παρούσαν ἀπὸ τοῦ Ἀλκιβιάδου περὶ τούτων ἐπιστολήν, compared with αἱ δὲ παρὰ τοῦ Ἀλκιβιάδου ἐπιστολαὶ οὐ πολὺ ὕστερον ἦκον; from Joseph. Ant. xii. 4. 10 ὁ Λακεδαιμονίων βασιλεὺς Ἀρειος πρεσβείαν τε ἔπεμπε καὶ ἐπιστολὰς ὧν τὸ ἀντίγραφόν ἐστι τοιοῦτον, compared with ἡ μὲν οὖν ἐπιστολὴ ἡ πεμφθεῖσα παρὰ τοῦ Λακεδαιμονίων βασιλέως τούτου περιεῖχε τὸν τρόπον⁴; and from ¹ Col. iv. 16. I hope to consider the question of the 'epistle from Laodicea,' in the introduction and notes to the Epistle to the Colossians.

² See the introduction, p. 68 note.

³ Thom. Mag. p. 354 καὶ ἐπιστολὴ καὶ ἐπιστολαὶ πληθυντικῶς ῥητορικόν.

⁴ Comp. also Antiq. xiii. 4. 8.

ἐπιστολαὶ used of a single letter.

Aleiphron Epist. ii. 4 ὡς διεπέμψω μου τοῦ βασιλέως τὰς ἐπιστολάς, εὐθὺς ἀνέγνων, compared with σοβοῦσα ταῖς χερσὶν ἐμαντῆς τὴν ἐπιστολὴν σὺν αὐτῇ τῇ βασιλικῇ σφραγίδι; the singular in each case standing in the immediate neighbourhood of the plural and referring to the same writing. I have placed these instances side by side, because the context in all three cases determines the sense, and because being taken from writers of different epochs they show that the usage was not confined to any one period. The following references also, which might be multiplied many times, serve to illustrate its occurrence in classical writers at different stages of the language: Eur. Iph. Taur. 589, 767, Iph. Aul. 111, 314, Thucyd. i. 132, iv. 50, Polyb. v. 43. 5, Lucian. Amor. 47 (π. p. 450), Julian. Epist. 73 (comp. Epist. 44)¹. Nor is this usage confined to classical Greek. In Esth. iii. 14 ἐπιστολαί is a translation of a singular substantive (כתב); while in 1 Macc. v. 14, x. 3, 7, xi. 29, xii. 5 etc., it plainly refers to a single document. And in ecclesiastical writers of a later date examples are found. Eusebius (H.E. vi. 1) for instance, like the authors first quoted, uses ἐπιστολὴ and ἐπιστολαί in the same context when speaking of one and the same letter².

If therefore we find that in another place Polycarp, referring again to the Epistle to the Philippians, uses the singular (ἐπιστολῇ)³, this circumstance will present no difficulty; for we have seen similar variations of usage in the passages of Thucydides and Aleiphron, of Josephus and Eusebius, where the anomaly is rendered more striking by the fact that in these authors the singular and plural occur in close proximity.

But a later passage of this same father has been quoted to show that he carefully distinguishes between the singular and the plural of this word. 'The letters (ἐπιστολάς) of Ignatius,' he writes, 'which were sent to us by him, and such others as we had by us, we have sent to you, as ye commanded; all which (αἵτινες) are appended to this letter (ἐπιστολῇ); from which ye may derive great advantage' (§ 13). The plural here has been explained as referring to the two letters, the one to the Smyrnæans, the other to Polycarp, contained in the short Greek recension. This explanation, it will be seen, supposes either the genuineness of the short Greek recension of the Ignatian letters or the spuriousness of this portion of Polycarp's epistle. Into these questions it would be beside the purpose to enter here. I would only say that here again the ἐπιστολαί may very well be used of a single letter, and that on this supposition there is a certain propriety in the change from the plural to the singular, when the writer has occasion to speak of himself. For the plural ἐπιστολαί, which signifies properly 'directions, injunctions,' whenever it occurs in prose of a single epistle, seems to denote a missive of importance, such as a king's mandate or a bishop's Singular and plural interchanged.

Polycarp's usage elsewhere considered.

¹ I owe a few of these references to Rettig Quest. Phil. p. 38.

² Comp. also H. E. vi. 43, quoted by Cotelier on Polyc. Phil. 3. The plural 'epistolæ' in Latin is used in the same way; Justin xi. 8, 12, Plin. N.H. xxxiii. 12, quoted by Fabric. Bibl. Græc. iv. p. 804 (ed. Harles).

³ Polyc. Phil. 11 'qui estis in principio epistolæ ejus,' where some word like 'laudati' should perhaps be supplied. Others however suppose the original Greek to have been οἱ ὄντες ἐν ἀρχῇ ἐπιστολαὶ αὐτοῦ, comparing for ἐν ἀρχῇ Phil. iv. 15, and for ἐπιστολαὶ αὐτοῦ 2 Cor. iii. 2, 3.

pastoral; and its employment by Polycarp to designate his own letter would have jarred strangely with his pervading tone of humility, though it would fitly describe the communications of the blessed Apostle Paul (§ 3) or the holy martyr Ignatius (§ 13)¹.

He does not refer to a lost letter.

On the whole then it would appear probable that Polycarp refers solely to the extant Epistle to the Philippians; for though the existence of other letters was seen to be in itself antecedently probable, yet it seems very unlikely that an epistle of St Paul, which had survived the opening of the second century and was then known to the Churches of Smyrna and Philippi, should so soon afterwards have passed wholly out of memory. Irenæus, the pupil of Polycarp, is evidently acquainted with only one Epistle of St Paul to the Philippians².

¹ By a curious coincidence Maximus uses the plural of Polycarp's own epistle: Dion. Areop. Op. ii. p. 93 (ed. Corder.), ἔχει δὲ καὶ ἐπιστολὰς ὁ αὐτὸς θεῖος Πολύκαρπος πρὸς Φιλιππησίους.

² Georgius Syncellus indeed (Chron. i. p. 651 ed. Dind., a passage which I owe to Rettig Quæst. Phil. p. 38) speaking of St Clement of Rome writes, τούτου καὶ ὁ ἀπόστολος ἐν τῇ πρὸς Φιλιππησίους μέμνηται πρώτη ἐπιστολῇ εἰπών, Μετὰ καὶ Κλήμεντος κ.τ.λ.: but it seems wholly incredible that Syncellus himself, and very unlikely that any authority quoted by him, should have been acquainted with more than one Epistle to the Philippians: and I can only account for the reading by supposing that a superfluous a crept into the text and was afterwards written out in full πρώτη.

²βλέπετε τοὺς κύνας, βλέπετε τοὺς κακοὺς ἐρ-

III. 2—6. 'Be on your guard. Shun these shameless dogs, these workers of mischief, these mutilators of the flesh. I call it mutilation, for we are the true circumcision, we offer the genuine service; we—you and I—Gentile and Jew alike—who serve by the Spirit of God, who place our boast in Christ Jesus and put no trust in the flesh. And yet, whatever be the value of this confidence in the flesh, I assert it as well. If any other man claims to put trust in the flesh, my claim is greater. I was circumcised on the eighth day, a child of believing parents. I am descended of an old Israelite stock. I belong to the loyal and renowned tribe of Benjamin. I am of a lineage which has never conformed to foreign usages, but has preserved throughout the language and the customs of the fathers. Thus much for my inherited privileges; and now for my personal career. Do they speak of law? I belong to the Pharisees, the strictest of all sects. Of zeal? I persecuted the Church. This surely is enough! Of righteousness? In such righteousness as consists in obedience to law, I have never been found a defaulter.'

2. A probable account of the abrupt introduction of this new topic is given in the introduction p. 68. As the Apostle is on the point of referring once more to the divisions in the Philippian Church before concluding, he is interrupted. Whether the interruption was momentary, or whether some hours or even days elapsed before the letter was resumed, it is vain to conjecture. But it has diverted, or at least modified, the current of his thoughts. He speaks no longer of the social dissensions actually prevalent among the Philippians; but he warns them against a much more serious though hitherto distant peril—the infection of Judaism. It seems probable therefore that he had meanwhile been apprised of some fresh outbreak or reminded of some old antagonism on the part of his Judaizing opponents in Rome; see p. 17.

The thrice repeated 'mark ye,' together with the recurrence of the definite article in the three clauses—the dogs, the evil workers, the concision—shows that St Paul is alluding to a well-known and well-marked party in or out of the Church.

βλέπετε] 'look to, be on your guard against, mark and watch.' Comp. Mark iv. 24 βλέπετε τί ἀκούετε, 2 Joh. 8 βλέπετε ἑαυτοὺς: so frequently βλέπετε ἀπό (e.g. Mark viii. 15) and βλέπετε μή (e.g. Luke xxi. 8).

τοὺς κύνας] St Paul retorts upon the Judaizers the term of reproach, by which they stigmatized the Gentiles as impure. In the Mosaic law the word is used to denounce the foul moral profligacies of heathen worship (Deut. xxiii. 19 οὐ προσοίσεις μίσθωμα πόρνῃς οὐδὲ ἀλλαγμὰ κυνός). Among the Jews of the Christian era it was a common designation of the Gentiles, involving chiefly the idea of ceremonial impurity; see esp. Olem. Hom. ii. 19 εἶπεν Οὐκ ἔξεστιν ἰᾶσθαι τὰ ἔθνη εἰκότα κυσὶν διὰ τὸ διαφόροις χρῆσθαι τροφαῖς καὶ πράξεσιν, ἀποδοδομένης τῆς κατὰ τὴν βασιλείαν τραπέζης τοῖς νιοῖς Ἰσραὴλ· ἡ δὲ τοῦτο ἀκούσασα, καὶ τῆς αὐτῆς τραπέζης ὡς κύων ψυχίων ἀποπιπτόντων συμμεταλαμβάνειν [δεομένη], μεταθεμένη ὅπερ ἦν, τῷ ὁμοίως διατᾶσθαι τοῖς τῆς βασιλείας νιοῖς τῆς εἰς τὴν θυγατέρα, ὡς ἡξίωσεν, ἔτυχεν ἰάσεως. The writer thus interprets from a Judaizing point of view the incident in Matt. xv. 22 sq., where our Lord uses the Jewish phraseology of the day to test the faith of the Canaanite woman. See the rabbinical quotations in Schöttgen i. p. 1145. St John applies the term to those whose moral impurity excludes them from the new Jerusalem, the spiritual Israel, Apoc. xxii. 15. As a term of reproach the word on the lips of a Jew signified chiefly 'impurity'; of a Greek, 'impudence.' The herds of dogs which prowl about eastern cities, without a home and without an owner, feeding on the refuse and filth of the streets, quarrelling among themselves, and attacking the passer-by, explain both applications of the image. To the Jew more especially the comparison of the heathen to a dog would commend itself, as describing his indiscriminate use of meats whether clean or not. Thus St Paul's language here is strikingly significant: 'They speak of themselves as God's children; they boast of eating at God's table; they reproach us as dogs, as foul and unclean, as outcasts from the covenant, because forsooth we eat meat bought at the shambles, because we do not observe the washing of cups and platters. I reverse the image. We are the children, for we banquet on the spiritual feast which God has spread before us: they are the dogs, for they greedily devour the garbage of carnal ordinances, the very refuse of God's table.' See the note on σκύβαλα ver. 8.

γάτας, βλέπετε τὴν κατατομήν. ἡμεῖς γὰρ ἐσμεν ἡ περιτομή, οἱ πνεύματι Θεοῦ λατρεύοντες καὶ καυχώμενοι

κακοὺς ἐργάτας] So again he says of the Judaizing teachers 2 Cor. xi. 13 οἱ τοιοῦτοι ψευδαπόστολοι, ἐργάται δόλιοι. The proselytizing zeal of the party has been already noticed by St Paul, i. 15, 16. There he contemplates it as exerted upon heathendom, and with very mixed feelings he constrains himself to rejoice: here on the other hand he apprehends its assaults on a more liberal Christianity, and an unqualified condemnation is pronounced upon it. The Pharisaic party (Acts xv. 5) which 'compassed sea and land to make one proselyte' (Matt. xxiii. 15) had carried its old leaven into the Christian Church. There was the same zealous activity in the pursuit of its aims (ἐργάτας), and there were the same pernicious consequences in the attainment (κακοὺς).

τὴν κατατομήν] 'the concision, the mutilation.' The corresponding verb κατατέμνειν is used in the LXX only of mutilations and incisions forbidden by the Mosaic law; Levit. xxi. 5 ἐπὶ τὰς σάρκας αὐτῶν οὐ κατατεμύσιν ἐντομίδας, 1 Kings xviii. 28 κατατέμνοντο κατὰ τὸν ἐθισμόν αὐτῶν, Is. xv. 2, Hos. xvii. 14. Hence the appropriateness here: 'This circumcision, which they vaunt, is in Christ only as the gashings and mutilations of the idolatrous heathen': comp. Gal. v. 12 ὄφελον καὶ ἀποκύνονται, with the note. Thus it carries out the idea of κύνας. For the paronomasia of κατατομή, περιτομή, compare 2 Thess. iii. 11 μηδὲν ἐργαζομένους ἀλλὰ περιεργαζομένους, Rom. xii. 3 μὴ ὑπερφρονεῖν παρ' ὃ δεῖ φρονεῖν ἀλλὰ φρονεῖν εἰς τὸ σωφρονεῖν: see Winer § lxviii. p. 658 sqq. See the monograph by J. F. Böttcher de Paron. etc. Paulo freq. (Lips. 1823); and for instances in the Old Testament Glass. Phil. Sacr. v. ii. 2, p. 926. But, though especially frequent in the Bible, they are naturally common everywhere. The saying of Diogenes, that the school of Euclides was not σχολή but χολή and the discourse of Plato not διατριβή but κατατριβή (Diog. Laert. vi. 24), may be matched in English by the ambassador's complaint that he had been sent not to Spain but to Pain, or Leicester's report of the English troops in the Netherlands that the Queen's 'poor subjects were no better than abjects,' or Coleridge's description of French philosophy as 'psilosophy,' or again in Latin by the taunt of pope against antipope that he was not 'consecratus' but 'execratus,' or the common proverb 'compendia dispendia.' See also Farrar's Chapters on Language p. 265 sq.

3. ἡμεῖς κ.τ.λ.] 'We are the true

ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ καὶ οὐκ ἐν σαρκὶ πεποιθότες. ⁴καίπερ ἐγὼ ἔχων πεποίθησιν καὶ ἐν σαρκί· εἰ τις δοκεῖ ἄλλος circumcision; we, who have put off the impurity of the heart and have put on Christ, whether belonging to the outward circumcision, as I, or to the outward uncircumcision, as you.'

ἡ περιτομή] The contrast of the material and the spiritual circumcision occurs more than once elsewhere in St Paul: Rom. ii. 25—29, Col. ii. 11, comp. Ephes. ii. 11 οἱ λεγόμενοι ἄκροβυστία ὑπὸ τῆς λεγομένης περιτομῆς ἐν σαρκὶ χειροποιήτου. In this respect, as in so many others, St Stephen's speech contains an anticipation of St Paul: Acts vii. 51 ἀπερίτμητοι καρδίαις καὶ τοῖς ὤσιν. The use made of the image of circumcision, as a metaphor for purity, in the Old Testament had prepared the way for the Apostle's application: e.g. the circumcision of the heart, Levit. xxvi. 41, Deut. x. 16, xxx. 6, Ezek. xlv. 7; of the ear, Jer. vi. 10; of the lips, Exod. vi. 12, 30; comp. Jer. ix. 25, 26. Thus too Philo discusses at some length the significance of this rite, as a symbol of moral purgation, de Circumc. II. p. 211 M, comp. de Vict. Off. II. p. 258 M. So too Justin. Dial. 12, p. 229 C δὲν-τέρας ἤδη χρεῖα περιτομῆς, καὶ ὑμεῖς ἐπὶ τῇ σαρκὶ μέγα φρονεῖτε (comp. § 19, p. 236 C), § 43, p. 261 C οὐ ταύτην τὴν κατὰ σάρκα παρελάβομεν περιτομὴν ἀλλὰ πνευματικὴν, Barnab. § 9.

πνεύματι Θεοῦ] 'by the Spirit of God,' and not with the ordinances and traditions of men. Thus Θεοῦ, besides being the better supported reading, is also more emphatic than Θεῶ. The latter however presents a closer parallel to Rom. i. 9 ὁ Θεὸς ὃς λατρεῖν ἐν τῷ πνεύματί μου. See the next note.

λατρεύοντες] The terms λατρεία, λατρεῖν had got to be used in a very special sense to denote the service rendered to Jehovah by the Israelite race, as His peculiar people: see especially Rom. ix. 4 ὃν ἡ υἰοθεσία κ.τ.λ.

καὶ ἡ λατρεία καὶ αἱ ἐπαγγελίαι, Acts xxvi. 7 εἰς ἣν τὸ δωδεκάφυλον ἡμῶν ἐν ἑκτενείᾳ νύκτα καὶ ἡμέραν λατρεῖν κ.τ.λ.; comp. Heb. ix. 1, 6. Hence the significance of St Paul's words here; 'We possess the true περιτομή, the circumcision not of the flesh but of the heart, and we also offer the true λατρεία, the service not of external rites but of a spiritual worship': comp. Joh. iv. 23, 24. The same opposition between the external and the spiritual λατρεία is implied again in Rom. xii. 1 παραστήσαι τὰ σώματα ὑμῶν θυσίαν ζῶσαν ἁγίαν εὐάρεστον τῷ Θεῶ, τὴν λογικὴν λατρείαν ὑμῶν, besides Rom. i. 9 quoted in the previous note. Compare Athenag. Leg. 13 προσφέρειν δέον ἀνάμακτον θυσίαν καὶ τὴν λογικὴν προσάγειν λατρείαν, and see the note on iv. 18. This definite sense of λατρεῖν explains how it is used absolutely without any case of the object following, as in Luke ii. 37, Acts xxvi. 7. The substitution of Θεῶ for Θεοῦ here was probably an attempt to relieve the apparent awkwardness of this absolute use.

καυχόμενοι κ.τ.λ.] in accordance with the precept in Jer. ix. 23, 24, twice quoted in a condensed form by St Paul, 1 Cor. i. 31, 2 Cor. x. 17, ὁ καυχώμενος ἐν κυρίῳ καυχάσθω.

οὐκ ἐν σαρκί] Comp. 2 Cor. xi. 18, Gal. vi. 13, 14. The expression ἐν σαρκὶ extends beyond περιτομῇ to all external privileges.

4. καίπερ ἐγὼ κ.τ.λ.] 'though having myself confidence.' The Apostle for the moment places himself on the same standing ground with the Judaizers and, adopting their language, speaks of himself as having that which in fact he had renounced: comp. 2 Cor. xi. 18 ἐπεὶ πολλοὶ καυχῶνται κατὰ [τὴν] σάρκα, καὶ γὰρ καυχῶσμαι. The proper force of ἔχων πεποίθησιν must not be explained away. The καίπερ ἐγὼ singles out the Apostle (comp. 1 Thess.

πεποιθέναι ἐν σαρκί, ἐγὼ μᾶλλον ὁ περιτομῇ ὀκταήμερος, ἐκ γένους Ἰσραὴλ, φυλῆς Βενιαμείν, Ἑβραῖος ἐξ

ii. 18), for the Philippians did not likewise possess these claims.

καὶ ἐν σαρκί] 'in the flesh as well as in Christ; as if forsooth this one topic did not cover the whole field of boasting.'

δοκεῖ πεποιθέναι] 'thinks to have confidence'; 'seems to himself' rather than 'seems to others'; for the former, besides being the more common meaning in St Paul (1 Cor. iii. 18, vii. 40, x. 12, xi. 16 etc.), is also more forcible. With ἐγὼ μᾶλλον we must understand δοκῶ πεποιθέναι in the same sense; 'If they arrogate to themselves these carnal privileges, I also arrogate them to myself.' St Paul is using an argumentum ad hominem; in his own language, he is for the moment 'speaking foolishly,' is 'speaking not after the Lord,' 2 Cor. xi. 17. See the preceding note.

5. This passage has a close parallel in 2 Cor. xi. 21; and the comparison is instructive. With the same depth of feeling and the same general purport, the form of expression in the two passages differs widely. The tumultuous eagerness of the Apostle's earlier style, which appears in the letter to the Corinthians, is replaced here by a more subdued, though not less earnest, tone of remonstrance. Compare also Rom. ix. 3—5, xi. 1.

The four clauses at the beginning of the fifth verse, which describe the privileges inherited by the Apostle apart from his own act or will, are arranged in an ascending scale. (1) The due performance of the rite of circumcision shows that his parents were neither heathens nor sons of Ishmael. (2) But as this is consistent with their being proselytes, he specifies his direct Israelite descent. (3) Again his ancestors might have been descendants of Israel and yet have belonged to a renegade tribe. Against this possibility he guards by naming the faithful tribe of Benjamin.

(4) Lastly, many of those, whose descent was unimpeachable and who inherited the faith of the Mosaic law, yet as living among heathens adopted the language and conformed to the customs of the people around them. Not such were the forefathers of Saul of Tarsus. There had been no Hellenist among them; they were all strict Hebrews from first to last.

περιτομῇ ὀκταήμερος] Converts to Judaism would be circumcised in mature age; Ishmaelites in their thirteenth year. Concerning the latter see Joseph. Ant. i. 12. 2. For the dative περιτομῇ 'in respect of circumcision' comp. ii. 7 σχήματι εὐρεθείς, and see Winer § xxxi. p. 229. The nominative περιτομή, read in some texts, is hardly translatable. For ὀκταήμερος 'eight days old' compare τριήμερος (M. Anton. iv. 50), τετραήμερος (Arist. Pol. iii. 15), πενθήμερος (Xen. Hell. vii. 1. 14), δεχήμερος (Thucyd. v. 26, 32), etc. The passages quoted show that the words denote properly not interval but duration, so that 'on the eighth day' is not a very accurate translation. The broken days at the beginning and end are of course counted in to make up the eight.

ἐκ γένους Ἰσραὴλ] i.e. his parents were not grafted into the covenant people, but descended from the original stock. On the significance of 'Israel, Israelite,' as implying the privileges of the theocratic covenant, see the note on Gal. vi. 16.

φυλῆς Βενιαμείν] As Benjamin gave to the Israelites their first king, as Benjamin alone was faithful to Judah at the disruption, so also this tribe had from the earliest times held the post of honour in the armies of the nation. 'After thee, O Benjamin' was a battle-cry of Israel; Judges v. 14, Hos. v. 8. The glory of the Benjamite however did not end here. He remembered with pride that his fore-father alone of the twelve patriarchs was born in the land of promise (see the words put into the mouth of Mordecai in Megill. Esth. iii. 4, quoted by Wetstein). He would also recal the great national deliverance wrought by means of a Benjamite, which was commemorated in the yearly festival of Purim. St Paul mentions his descent from Benjamin again Rom. xi. 1. He doubtless derived his name 'Saul' directly or indirectly from the Benjamite king, to whom he himself refers with marked emphasis (Acts xiii. 21). At a very early date the prediction in Jacob's blessing of Benjamin (Gen. xlix. 27), 'In the morning he shall devour the prey and at night he shall divide the spoil,' was applied to the persecuting zeal and later conversion of St Paul; Test. xii Patr. Benj. 11, Tertull. adv. Marc. v. 1, Hippol. Fragm. 50 (p. 140 Lagarde, Ephr. Syr. iv. pp. 114, 193, comp. p. 288); see Galatians p. 308. On the character of Saul of Tarsus in connexion with the character of the tribe see Stanley Jewish Church II. p. 40.

Ἑβραίων, κατὰ νόμον Φαρισαῖος, ὁ κατὰ ζῆλος διώκων
τὴν ἐκκλησίαν, κατὰ δικαιοσύνην τὴν ἐν νόμῳ γενόμενος

Ἑβραῖος ἐξ Ἑβραίων] As Ἰουδαῖος is opposed to Ἕλλην in the New Testament (e.g. Rom. i. 16), so is Ἑβραῖος to Ἑλληνιστής (Acts vi. 1). In other words, while the former pair of terms expresses a contrast of race and religion, the latter implies difference of language and manners. Within the pale of the Jewish Church a man was Ἰουδαῖος, who traced his descent from Jacob and conformed to the religion of his fathers, but he was not Ἑβραῖος also, unless he spoke the Hebrew tongue and retained Hebrew customs: see Trench N. T. Syn. 1st ser. § xxxix. Hence here, as in 2 Cor. xi. 22, 'Hebrew' implies something which is not expressed in 'Israelite.' Though St Paul was born in Tarsus, he was yet brought up under a great Hebrew teacher in the Hebrew metropolis (Acts xxii. 3); he spoke the 'Hebrew' language fluently (xxi. 40, xxii. 2); he quotes frequently from the Hebrew Scriptures which he translates for himself, thus contrasting with his contemporaries the Jewish Philo and the Christian writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews, who commonly use the Hellenistic version of the Seventy. The tradition mentioned by Jerome on Philem. 23 (vii. p. 762 ed. Vallarsi), that St Paul's parents lived in the Galilean town of Gischala and were driven thence by the Roman invasion, contains its own refutation in a manifest anachronism; but it seems to illustrate St Paul's statement here, for it may rest on a reminiscence of the long residence of his family in those parts. For the form of expression Ἑβραῖος ἐξ Ἑβραίων, 'a Hebrew and of Hebrew ancestry', comp. Herod. ii. 143 πύρωμις ἐκ πυρώμιος, Demosth. Andr. p. 614 δούλους ἐκ δούλων καλῶν ἑαυτοῦ βελτίους καὶ ἐκ βελτιόνων, Polyb. ii. 59. 1 οὐ μόνον γεγονέναι τύραννον ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐκ τυράννων πεφυκέναι, with other passages collected in Wetstein and Kyjke.

Having thus enumerated his inherited privileges, the Apostle goes on to speak of matters which depended on his own personal choice. Here are three topics of boasting. (1) As regards law, he attached himself to the sect which was strictest in its ritual observance. (2) As regards zeal, he had been as energetic as any of his countrymen in persecuting the Church. (3) As regards righteousness, he had left nothing undone which the law required.

νόμον] 'law', not 'the law'; for though the Mosaic law is meant, yet it is here regarded in the abstract, as a principle of action, being coordinated with ζῆλος and δικαιοσύνην. For the ἀμεμπτος. ⁷[ἀλλὰ] ἅτινα ἦν μοι κέρδη, ταῦτα ἡγήμαι διὰ τὸν Χριστὸν ζημίαν. ⁸ἀλλὰ μὲν οὖν [καί] ἡγοῦμαι πάντα ζημίαν εἶναι διὰ τὸ ὑπερέχον τῆς γνώσεως Χρισ-

7 ἀπὸνά μοι ἦν κέρδη. 8. ἀλλὰ μενούονγε [καί] ἡγοῦμαι.

distinction of νόμος and ὁ νόμος see the notes on Gal. ii. 19, iv. 4, 5, 21, v. 18, vi. 13.

Φαρισαῖος] Acts xxiii. 6 ἐγὼ Φαρισαῖος εἰμι υἱὸς Φαρισαίων (where υἱὸς Φαρισαίων perhaps refers rather to his teachers than to his ancestors, being a Hebraism like 'the sons of the prophets'; comp. Amos vii. 14), xxvi. 5 κατὰ τὴν ἀκριβεστάτην αἵρεσιν τῆς ἡμετέρας θρησκείας ἔζησα Φαρισαῖος, xxii. 3 πεπαιδευμένος κατὰ ἀκρίβειαν τοῦ πατρῷου νόμου. Similarly St Paul calls himself ζηλωτὴς τῶν πατρικῶν παραδόσεων in Gal. i. 14: see the note there.

6. κατὰ ἦλος κ.τ.λ.] An expression of intense irony, condemning while he seems to exalt his former self: 'I was zealous above them all; I asserted my principles with fire and sword; I persecuted, imprisoned, slew these infatuated Christians; this was my great claim to God's favour.' This condensed irony is more common in the earlier epistles: e.g. 1 Cor. iv. 8, 2 Cor. xi. 1, 7, 19. The correct reading is ζῆλος (not ζῆλον), for which form see Winer § ix. p. 78, A. Buttmann p. 20. In Clem. Rom. §§ 3, 4, 5, 6, where the word occurs frequently, the masculine and neuter seem to be interchanged without any law.

δῶκον] The references to his persecution of the Church are frequent in St Paul: see the note on Gal. i. 13 καθ' ὑπερβολὴν ἐδῶκον τὴν ἐκκλησίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ.

τὴν ἐν νόμῳ] added to qualify and explain δικαιοσύνην; 'Such righteousness as consists in law, in obedience to formal precepts', but not the true righteousness: see ver. 9. Here ἐν νόμῳ is used without the article for the same reason as in ver. 5.

γενόμενος ἀμεμπτος] 'showing myself blameless', i.e. 'I omitted no observance however trivial', for μέμφεσθαι applies to sins of omission.

ἅτινα κ.τ.λ.] 'All such things which I used to count up as distinct items with a miserly greed and reckon to my credit—these I have massed together under one general head as loss'. This paraphrase is intended to bring out, though with a necessary exaggeration, the idea faintly expressed by the change from the plural (κέρδη) to the singular (ζημίαν). Otherwise there would be a natural tendency to make both plural or both singular: comp. Menand. Mon. 301 (Meineke iv. p. 348) κέρδος πονηρὸν ζημίαν αἰεὶ φέρει with ἰβ. 496 (p. 354) τὰ μικρὰ κέρδη ζημίας μεγάλας φέρει. For ἅτινα, denoting 'the class of things', see the notes on Gal. iv. 24. v. 19.

διὰ τὸν Χριστόν] 'for Christ', i.e. as it is explained below (ver. 8), ἵνα Χριστὸν κερδήσω. To this end it was necessary first to renounce all other claims to righteousness: see especially Gal. v. 4.

8. ἀλλὰ μὲν οὖν κ.τ.λ.] 'nay moreover I do count all things etc.'; see Winer § liii. p. 463. This combination of particles introduces the present statement as an amendment and extension of the former. The advance consists in two points; (1) The substitution of the present for the perfect (ἡγοῦμαι for ἡγήμαι); (2) The expansion of ταῦτα into πάντα.

διὰ τὸ ὑπερέχον κ.τ.λ.] The preposition may mean either 'for the sake of' (as in διὰ τὸν Χριστόν above and δι' ὃν below); or, as the sense of ὑπερέχον suggests, 'by reason of', signifying that the surpassing worth of this knowledge eclipses and annihilates all other gains in comparison; τοῦ Ἰησοῦ τοῦ κυρίου μου, δι' ὃν τὰ πάντα ἐζημιώθην καὶ ἡγοῦμαι σκύβαλα, ἵνα Χριστὸν κερδήσω⁹ καὶ εὑρεθῶ ἐν αὐτῷ μὴ ἔχων ἐμὴν δικαιοσύνην τὴν ἐκ νόμου, ἀλλὰ as 2 Cor. iii. 10 οὐ δεδοξασται τὸ δεδοξασμένον ἐν τούτῳ τῷ μέρει εἶνέκεν τῆς ὑπερβαλλούσης δόξης.

τοῦ κυρίου μου] See the note on i. 3.

τὰ πάντα ἐζημιώθην] 'I suffered the confiscation, was mulcted, of all things together.' For τὰ πάντα, which is somewhat stronger than πάντα, comp. Rom. viii. 32, xi. 36, 1 Cor. viii. 6, etc.

σκύβαλα] The word seems to signify generally 'refuse', being applied most frequently in one sense or other to food, as in Plut. Mor. p. 352 D περίττωμα δὲ τροφῆς καὶ σκύβαλον οὐδὲν ἄγνόν οὐδὲ καθαρὸν ἐστὶ· ἐκ δὲ τῶν περιττωμάτων ἔρια καὶ λάχναι καὶ τρίχες καὶ ὄνυχες ἀναφύονται. The two significations most common are: (1) 'Excrement', the portion of food rejected by the body, as not possessing nutritive qualities: e.g. Joseph. B. J. v. 13. 7. This sense is frequent in medical writers. (2) 'The refuse or leavings of a feast', the food thrown away from the table: e.g. Leon. Alex. 30 (Anthol. II. p. 196) ὡς ἀποδειπνιδίου γευσόμενος σκυβάλου, Aristo 2 (ib. II. p. 258) δεῖπνον συγχὸν ἀπὸ σκυβάλων, Adesp. 13 (ib. III. p. 253) ἐρρίφθω ξηροῖς φυρόμενον σκυβάλοις, Q. Mæc. 8 (ib. II. p. 238), Adesp. 386 (ib. III. p. 233); and metaphorically Heges. 4 (ib. I. p. 254) ἐξ ἀλὸς ἡμίβρωτον ἀνηνέγκαντο σαγηνεῖς ἄνδρα πολυκλαυτον ναυτίλης σκύβαλον. So again σκυβάλισμα, Pseudo-Phocyl. 144 μηδ' ἄλλον παρὰ δαιτὸς ἔδης σκυβάλισμα τραπέζης.

As regards derivation, it is now generally connected with σκάω, σκατός (Benfey Wurzel. I. p. 628, II. p. 172, Lobeck Pathol. p. 92). This derivation countenances the former of the two senses given above; but Suidas explains the word, τὸ τοῖς κυσὶ βαλλόμενον κυσίβαλόν τι ὄν (comp. Etym.

Mag. p. 719, 53); and so Pott. Etym. Forsch. II. p. 295, taking σκυ- to represent ἐς κύνας and comparing σκορακίζειν. This account of the word seems at least as probable as the other; but whether correct or not, it would appear to have been the popular derivation, and from this circumstance the second of the two meanings would become more prominent than the first.

At all events this meaning, which is well supported by the passages quoted, is especially appropriate here. The Judaizers spoke of themselves as banqueters seated at the Father's table, of Gentile Christians as dogs greedily snatching up the refuse meat which fell therefrom. St Paul has reversed the image. The Judaizers are themselves the dogs (ver. 2); the meats served to the sons of God are spiritual meats; the ordinances, which the formalists value so highly, are the mere refuse of the feast.

The earnest reiteration of St Paul's language here expresses the intensity of his desire to produce conviction: κέρδη, κερδήσω—ἡγῆμαι, ἡγοῦμαι, ἡγοῦμαι—ζημίαν, ζημίαν, ἐζημιώθην—διά, διά, διά—πάντα, τὰ πάντα—Χριστόν, Χριστοῦ, Χριστόν; see above i. 9, 14, 27, ii. 2.

9. εὑρεθῶ] 'may be found'; perhaps at the great day of revelation (2 Cor. v. 3), perhaps more generally (1 Cor. iv. 2). For the frequent use of this word in Aramaised Greek see the note on Gal. ii. 17.

ἐν αὐτῷ] 'in Christ', as part of Christ, as a member of His body. It is only by becoming one with Christ, that Christ's righteousness can become our righteousness.

ἐμὴν δικαιοσύνην] 'Any righteousness that I may have or not have.'

τὴν διὰ πίστεως Χριστοῦ, τὴν ἐκ Θεοῦ δικαιοσύνην ἐπὶ τῇ πίστει, ¹⁰ τοῦ γινῶναι αὐτὸν καὶ τὴν δύναμιν τῆς ἀναστάσεως αὐτοῦ καὶ κοινωνίαν [τῶν] παθημάτων αὐτοῦ,

It is ἐμὴν, not τὴν ἐμὴν; for the latter would seem to assume the existence of such personal righteousness. Comp. Rom. x. 3 ἀγνοοῦντες γὰρ τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ δικαιοσύνην καὶ τὴν ἰδίαν [δικαιοσύνην] ζητοῦντες στήσαι τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ τοῦ Θεοῦ οὐχ ὑπετάγησαν. St Paul is applying and extending the language of the Old Testament: comp. Ps. lxxi. 16, Is. lxiv. 6.

τὴν ἐκ νόμου] See above ver. 6; comp. Gal. ii. 16—21, iii. 10—12, 21, Rom. iii. 21—31, iv. 13, 14, ix. 30—32, x. 4, 5.

ἀλλὰ κ.τ.λ.] Here διὰ πίστεως Χριστοῦ is opposed to ἐκ νόμου, and ἐκ Θεοῦ to ἐμὴν, of the preceding clause.

διὰ πίστεως Χριστοῦ] ‘through faith in Christ.’ The ἐκ of the former clause is changed into διὰ here, because faith is only the means, not the source, of justification: see the note on Gal. ii. 16.

ἐπὶ τῇ πίστει] ‘on the condition of faith’; as Acts iii. 16. The article (τῇ πίστει) is used here, because πίστεως has gone before; ‘the faith thus supposed’.

10. ‘That I may know Him. And when I speak of knowing Him, I mean, that I may feel the power of His resurrection; but to feel this, it is first necessary that I should share His sufferings.’ The essence of knowing Christ consists in knowing the power of His resurrection; hence the words καὶ τὴν δύναμιν τῆς ἀναστάσεως αὐτοῦ are added by way of explanation. But these words again suggest another thought; no one can participate in His resurrection, who has not first participated in His death. Hence a further addition καὶ κοινωνίαν τῶν παθημάτων αὐτοῦ, which logically precedes τὴν δύναμιν κ.τ.λ., as appears from the explanation following, συμμορφιζόμενος τῷ θανάτῳ αὐτοῦ, εἰ πὼς κ.τ.λ.

τοῦ γινῶναι] not simply ‘know’, but ‘recognise, feel, appropriate’. On γινώσκειν see the notes to Gal. iii. 7, iv. 9. This intense sense of γινώσκειν, and, even of εἰδέναι (e.g. 1 Thess. v. 12), is the more common in Biblical Greek, because both words are used in the LXX as renderings of γιν which frequently has this sense.

τὴν δύναμιν κ.τ.λ.] ‘the power of His resurrection’; as the assurance of immortality (Rom. viii. 11, 1 Cor. xv. 14 sq.), as the triumph over sin and the pledge of justification (Rom. iv. 24, 25), as asserting the dignity and enforcing the claims of the human body (1 Cor. vi. 13—15, Phil. iii. 21); thus quickening and stimulating the whole moral and spiritual being (Rom. vi. 4 sq., Gal. ii. 20, Ephes. ii. 5, Col. ii. 12). On this see Westcott’s Gospel of the Resurrection ii. § 31 sq.

καὶ κοινωνίαν κ.τ.λ.] The participation in Christ’s sufferings partly follows upon and partly precedes the power of His resurrection. It follows, as the practical result on our life; it precedes, as leading up to the full and final appreciation of this power. In this latter aspect it is taken up in the explanatory clause which comes immediately after, συμμορφιζόμενος κ.τ.λ. For the expression τὴν κοινωνίαν κ.τ.λ. comp. 2 Cor. i. 5 περιστεύει τὰ παθήματα τοῦ Χριστοῦ εἰς ἡμᾶς κ.τ.λ., 1 Pet. iv. 13 κοινωνεῖτε τοῖς τοῦ Χριστοῦ παθήμασιν, Col. i. 24, Polyc. Phil. 9 παρὰ τῷ κυρίῳ ὧ καὶ συνέπαθον. See also for the idea the passages quoted in the next note. The τὴν before κοινωνίαν in the received text, besides being deficient in authority, severs the close connexion between ‘the power of His resurrection’ and ‘the participation in His sufferings.’

συμμορφιζόμενος τῷ θανάτῳ αὐτοῦ, ¹¹ εἰ πως καταντήσω εἰς τὴν ἐξανάστασιν τὴν ἐκ νεκρῶν. ¹² οὐχ ὅτι ἤδη

συμμορφιζόμενος κ.τ.λ.] See Rom. vi. 5 εἰ γὰρ σύμφυτοι γεγόναμεν τῷ ὁμοιώματι τοῦ θανάτου αὐτοῦ, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῆς ἀναστάσεως ἐσόμεθα, 2 Cor. iv. 10 πάντοτε τὴν νέκρωσιν τοῦ Ἰησοῦ ἐν τῷ σώματι περιφέροντες, ἵνα καὶ ἡ ζωὴ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ φανερωθῇ ἐν τῇ θνητῇ σαρκὶ ἡμῶν κ.τ.λ.; comp. Rom. viii. 17, 2 Tim. ii. 11, 12. The conformity with the sufferings of Christ implies not only the endurance of persecution for His name, but all pangs and all afflictions undergone in the struggle against sin either within or without. The agony of Gethsemane, not less than the agony of Calvary, will be reproduced however faintly in the faithful servant of Christ. For συμμορφιζόμενος see the detached note on μορφή and σχῆμα above p. 128.

εἰ πως καταντήσω] 'if so be I may attain.' The Apostle states not a positive assurance but a modest hope. For εἰ πως see Acts xxvii. 12 (optat.), Rom. i. 10 (fut.), xi. 14 (fut. or conj.). Here καταντήσω is probably the conjunctive, as εἰ καὶ καταλάβω follows immediately. The conjunctive with εἰ, barely tolerated in Attic prose (though less rare in poetry), is hardly more common in the Greek Testament. The only decisive instance seems to be εἰ καὶ καταλάβω below, ver. 12. In other passages (as Luke ix. 13, 1 Cor. ix. 11, xiv. 5, 1 Thess. v. 10, Rev. xi. 5) the possibility of error or the existence of various readings renders it more or less doubtful.

τὴν ἐξανάστασιν κ.τ.λ.] The 'resurrection from the dead' is the final resurrection of the righteous to a new and glorified life. This meaning, which the context requires, is implied by the form of expression. The general resurrection of the dead, whether good or bad, is ἡ ἀνάστασις τῶν νεκρῶν (e.g. 1 Cor. xv. 42); on the other hand the resurrection of Christ and of those who rise with Christ is generally

[ἡ] ἀνάστασις [ἡ] ἐκ νεκρῶν (Luke xx. 35, Acts iv. 2, 1 Pet. i. 3). The former includes both the ἀνάστασις ζωῆς and the ἀνάστασις κρίσεως (Joh. v. 29); the latter is confined to the ἀνάστασις ζωῆς. The received reading τῶν νεκρῶν for τὴν ἐκ νεκρῶν, besides being feebly supported, disregards this distinction. Here the expression is further intensified by the substitution of ἐξ-ἀνάστασις for ἀνάστασις, the word not occurring elsewhere in the New Testament.

12. In the following verses, though St Paul speaks of himself, his language seems really to be directed against the antinomian spirit, which in its rebound from Jewish formalism perverted liberty into license. It is necessary to supply a corrective to such false inferences from the doctrine of grace broadly stated. This he does by pointing to his own spiritual insecurity, his own earnest strivings, his own onward progress. 'To continue in sin that grace may abound' gains no countenance either from his doctrine or from his example. Having thus prepared the way, he in the 18th verse directly condemns those professed followers who thus dragged his teaching in the dust. See the introduction p. 69.

12—16. 'Do not mistake me, I hold the language of hope, not of assurance. I have not yet reached the goal; I am not yet made perfect. But I press forward in the race, eager to grasp the prize, forasmuch as Christ also has grasped me. My brothers, let other men vaunt their security. Such is not my language. I do not consider that I have the prize already in my grasp. This, and this only, is my rule. Forgetting the landmarks already passed and straining every nerve and muscle in the onward race, I press forward ever towards the goal, that I may win the prize of my ἐλαβον ἢ ἤδη τετελείωμαι, διώκω δὲ εἰ καὶ καταλάβω, ἐφ' ᾧ καὶ κατελήμφθην ὑπὸ Χριστοῦ. ¹³ ἀδελφοί, ἐγὼ ἐμναυτὸν οὐ λογίζομαι κατειληφέναι. ¹⁴ ἐν δέ, τὰ μὲν ὀπίσω ἐπιλανθανόμενος τοῖς δὲ ἔμπροσθεν ἐπεκτεινόμενος heavenly rest whereunto God has called me in Christ Jesus. Let us therefore, who have put away childish things, who boast that we are men in Christ, so resolve. Then, if in any matter we lose our way, God will at length reveal this also to us. Only let us remember one thing. Our footsteps must not swerve from the line in which we have hitherto trodden.'

12. οὐχ ὅτι κ.τ.λ.] The change of tense is not accidental. The aorist ἐλαβον points to a past epoch, to which ἐξημώθην, κατελήμφθην, also refer; 'not as though by my conversion I did at once attain'. The perfect τετελείωμαι describes his present state; 'not as though I were now already perfected.' For οὐχ ὅτι compare 2 Cor. iii. 5, vii. 9, 2 Thess. iii. 9, and below iv. 11, 17.

διώκω κ.τ.λ.] For the connexion of διώκειν and καταλαμβάνειν see Herod. ix. 58 διωκτέοι εἰς ὃς καταλαμβάνετε κ.τ.λ., Lucian Hermot. 77 ὠκύτεροι παραπολὺ διώκοντες οὐ κατέλαβον; compare LXX Exod. xv. 9, Eccles. xi. 10. For the meaning of these two words see the note on ἐπεκτεινόμενος ver. 14; for the conjunctive καταλάβω, the note on καταστήσω ver. 10.

ἐφ' ᾧ] may mean either (1) 'Wherefore, whereunto,' thus fulfilling God's purpose; or (2) 'Because,' thus fulfilling his own duty. In this second sense ἐφ' ᾧ is apparently used Rom. v. 12, 2 Cor. v. 4. The former meaning seems more appropriate here, though the latter is better supported by St Paul's usage elsewhere. On the different senses of ἐφ' ᾧ see Fritzsche on Rom. i. p. 299. Others, as the English Version, understand an antecedent, καταλάβω ἐκεῖνο ἐφ' ᾧ (comp. Luke v. 25); but καταλάβω, like κατειληφέναι below, seems to be used absolutely, as ἐλαβον and διώκω also are used.

13. ἀδελφοί] 'my brothers,' with a view of arresting attention; see the notes on Gal. iii. 15, vi. 1, 18.

ἐγὼ ἐμναυτὸν] 'Facile hoc alii de Paulo existimare possent,' says Bengel. This however seems hardly to be the point of the expression. St Paul is not contrasting his own estimate of himself with other people's estimate of him, but his estimate of himself with others' estimate of themselves. He is in fact protesting against the false security, the antinomian recklessness, which others deduced from the doctrine of faith: see the notes on τέλειοι ver. 15, and on vv. 12, 19, and the introduction p. 69.

14. ἐν δέ] This usage may be illustrated by the classical expression δυοῖν θάτερον. It is difficult to say whether ἐν is a nominative or an accusative. If (with Winer § lxvi. p. 642) we may compare 2 Cor. vi. 13, it is the latter.

τὰ ὀπίσω] i.e. the portion of the course already traversed. Compare Lucian Calumn. 12 οἷόν τι καὶ ἐπὶ τοῖς γυνικαῖς ἀγῶσιν ὑπὸ τῶν δρομέων γίγνεται· κάκει γὰρ ὁ μὲν ἀγαθὸς δρομεὺς τῆς ὑσπληγος εὐθὺς καταπεσούσης, μόνον τοῦ πρόσω ἐφίμενος καὶ τὴν διάνοιαν ἀποτείνας πρὸς τὸ τέρμα κ.τ.λ.

ἐπεκτεινόμενος] 'superextensus: oculus manum, manus pedem prævertit et trahit', is Bengel's paraphrase. The metaphor may possibly be derived from the chariot races in the Circus, as the epistle was written from Rome. On this supposition the meaning of ἐπεκτεινόμενος has been aptly illustrated by Virgil's 'Instant verbera torto Et proni dant lora' (Georg. iii. 106). To this view διώκω lends some support, κατὰ σκοπὸν διώκω εἰς τὸ βραβεῖον τῆς ἄνω κλήσεως τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. ¹⁵ ὅσοι οὖν τέλειοι, τοῦτο φρονῶμεν· καὶ εἴ τι ἐτέρως φρονεῖτε, καὶ τοῦτο ὁ Θεὸς

15. τοῦτο φρονοῦμεν.

for it is frequently said of charioteers (e.g. Soph. El. 738); but all the terms used are equally appropriate to the foot-race, and there seems no reason for departing from St Paul's usual metaphor. Moreover the not looking back, which showed a right temper in a runner (Lucian l. c.), would be fatal to the charioteer; see Themist. Orat. xv. p. 196 Β ἀνδρὶ δὲ ἡνιοχοῦντι...ἀνάγκη...τὰ μὲν πρόσω μὴ πάνυ ὀρᾶν ὅπισω δὲ αἰετγράφθαι τῇ γνώμῃ πρὸς τοὺς διώκοντας κ.τ.λ.

εἰς τὸ βραβεῖον] 'unto the prize'; comp. 1 Cor. ix. 24. This preposition is used, because the prize marks the position of the goal. The ἐπὶ of the common text is an obvious substitution for a more difficult reading.

τῆς ἄνω κλήσεως] 'our heavenward calling'; so Philo Plant. § 6 p. 333 Μ πρὸς γὰρ τὸ θεῖον ἄνω καλεῖσθαι θέμις τοὺς ὑπ' αὐτοῦ καταπνευσθέντας, comp. Heb. iii. 1. The words ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ must be taken with κλήσεως; see 1 Cor. vii. 22, 1 Pet. v. 10.

15. ὅσοι οὖν τέλειοι] The τέλειοι are 'grown men' as opposed to children; e.g. 1 Cor. xiv. 20, Ephes. iv. 13, Heb. v. 14. They are therefore those who have passed out of the rudimentary discipline of ordinances (Gal. iv. 3, 4), who have put away childish things (1 Cor. xiii. 10—12), who have assumed the Apostle's ground respecting the law. The τέλειοι in fact are the same with the πνευματικοί: comp. 1 Cor. ii. 6 with iii. 1. But these men, who were proud of their manhood, who boasted their spiritual discernment, were often regardless of the scruples of others and even lax in their own lives. Hence the stress which St Paul here lays on the duty of moral and spiritual progress, as enforced by his own example. Thus in ὅσοι τέλειοι, 'all we who attained our manhood, our independence, in Christ,' there is the same reproachful irony as in 1 Cor. viii. 1 ὁἶδαμεν ὅτι πάντες γινώσκοντες ἔχουμεν, in Rom. xv. 1 ἡμεῖς οἱ δυνατοί, and possibly also in Gal. vi. 1 ὑμεῖς οἱ πνευματικοί. The epithet τέλειοι seems to have been especially affected by the party both at this time and later; comp. Barnab. 4 γενώμεθα πνευματικοί, γενώμεθα ναὸς τέλειος τῷ Θεῷ, Iren. i. 6. 4 εἰς τοὺς δὲ ὑπερυψούσι, τελείους ἀποκαλοῦντες καὶ σπέρματα ἐκλογῆς (comp. § 3, where οἱ τελειότατοι is said in irony, and see also i. 13. 5, i. 18. 1, iii. 13. 5), Clem. Alex. Pæd. i. 6 (p. 128 Potter) ἐμοὶ δὲ καὶ θαυμάζειν ἔπεισιν ὅπως σφᾶς τελείους τινὲς τολμῶσι καλεῖν καὶ γνωστικούς ὑπὲρ τὸν ἀπόστολον φρονούντες, φυσιοῦμενοί τε καὶ φρναττόμενοι κ.τ.λ., Hippol. Hæc. v. 8 οὐδεὶς τούτων τῶν μυστηρίων ἀκροατὴς γέγονεν εἰ μὴ μόνοι οἱ γνωστικοί τέλειοι, not without a reference to the secondary sense of the word, 'instructed in the mysteries.'

τοῦτο φρονῶμεν] 'let us have this mind' i.e. let us make it our rule to forget the past and press ever forward.

καὶ εἴ τι ἐτέρως κ.τ.λ.] 'Then, if only you hold this fundamental principle, if progress is indeed your rule; though you are at fault on any subject, God will reveal this also to you'; comp. Joh. vii. 17 εἰάν τις θέλῃ τὸ θέλημα αὐτοῦ ποιεῖν, γνώσεται περὶ τῆς διδαχῆς πότερον ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐστὶν κ.τ.λ. Here ἐτέρως seems to have the meaning 'amiss': see the note on Gal. i. 6. It may however be 'otherwise,' in reference to τοῦτο φρονῶμεν; in which case εἴ τι will mean 'in any minor point': 'If you are sound at the core, God will remove the superficial blemishes.'

ὑμῖν ἀποκαλύψει. ¹⁶πλὴν εἰς ὃ ἐφθάσαμεν, τῷ αὐτῷ στοιχεῖν.

¹⁷Συμμηταί μου γίνεσθε, ἀδελφοί, καὶ σκοπεῖτε

16. πλὴν εἰς ὃ κ.τ.λ.] 'only we must walk by the same rule whereunto we attained.' What is meant by this same rule? Is it (1) The rule of moral progress? or (2) The rule of faith as opposed to works? In the former case, the words would simply enforce the preceding τοῦτο φρονῶμεν; in the latter, they are added as a parting caution against 'the dogs, the base workers, the concision.' The latter seems preferable, as on the whole the reference to the Judaizers is the more probable, both because St Paul's earnestness would naturally prompt him to recur to this subject, and because the phrase is elsewhere used in the same connexion; Gal. vi. 16 ὅσοι τῷ κανόνι τούτῳ στοιχήσουσιν, comp. v. 25. The words after στοιχεῖν in the received text (κανόνι, τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν) are interpolated from Gal. vi. 16, Phil. ii. 2. Of these κανόνι is a correct gloss, while τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν expresses an idea alien to the context. Though πλὴν is now generally connected with πλεόν, πλείν, as if it signified 'more than, beyond' (e.g. Klotz Devar. ii. p. 724, Curtius Griech. Etym. p. 253), the etymology which connects it with πέλαις seems to offer a better explanation of its usage. It will then signify 'besides,' and hence, in passages like the present, 'apart from this,' 'setting this aside'; so that it is conveniently translated 'only': comp. i. 18, iv. 14. In this case it has an accusative form, like δίκην, ἐπὶ δίκην, or the Latin 'clam,' 'palam,' etc. For the dative of the rule or direction (τῷ αὐτῷ) see the notes on Gal. v. 16, 25, vi. 16. The infinitive στοιχεῖν is equivalent to an emphatic imperative; see Fritzsche Rom. iii. p. 85, and Winer § xliii. p. 332. For φθάμεν εἰς, 'to reach to' see Dan. iv. 19, Rom. ix. 31

17—21. 'My brethren, vie with each other in imitating me, and observe those whose walk of life is fashioned after our example. This is the only safe test. For there are many, of whom I told you often and now tell you again even in tears, who professing our doctrine walk not in our footsteps. They are foes to the cross of Christ; they are doomed to perdition; they make their appetites their god; they glory in their shame; they are absorbed in earthly things. Not such is our life. In heaven we have even now our country, our home; and from heaven hereafter we look in patient hope for a deliverer, even the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change the fleeting fashion of these bodies—the bodies of our earthly humiliation—so that they shall take the abiding form of His own body—the body of His risen glory: for such is the working of the mighty power whereby He is able to subdue all things alike unto Himself.'

17. Συμμηταί μου] i.e. 'Vie with each other in imitating me,' 'one and all of you imitate me': so συμμείσθαι Plat. Polit. p. 274 D. Compare 1 Cor. iv. 16, xi. 1, 1 Thess. i. 6, 2 Thess. iii. 7, 9, ἵνα ἑαυτοὺς τύπον δώμεν ὑμῖν εἰς τὸ μείσθαι ἡμᾶς. In 1 Cor. xi. 1 the injunction μιμηταί μου γίνεσθε is addressed, as here, to the party of reaction against Judaism.

σκοπεῖτε] 'mark and follow,' not as generally 'mark and avoid' e.g. Rom. xvi. 17. Under ἡμᾶς are included Timotheus, Epaphroditus, and other faithful companions known to the Philippians. Shrinking from the egotism of dwelling on his own personal example, St Paul passes at once from the singular (μου) to the plural (ἡμᾶς).

18. πολλοὶ γάρ] If the view which τοὺς οὕτω περιπατοῦντας καθὼς ἔχετε τύπον ἡμᾶς.

 18 πολλοὶ γὰρ περιπατοῦσιν, οὓς πολλάκις ἔλεγον ὑμῖν, νῦν δὲ καὶ κλαίων λέγω, τοὺς ἐχθροὺς τοῦ σταυροῦ τοῦ

I have taken to be correct, the persons here denounced are not the Judaizing teachers, but the antinomian reactionists. This view is borne out by the parallel expression, Rom. xvi. 18 τῷ κυρίῳ ἡμῶν Χριστῷ οὐ δουλεύουσιν ἀλλὰ τῇ ἑαυτῶν κοιλίᾳ, where the same persons seem to be intended; for they are described as creating divisions and offences (ver. 17), as holding plausible language (ver. 18), as professing to be wise beyond others (ver. 19) and yet not innocent in their wisdom; this last reproach being implied in the words θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς σοφοὺς εἶναι εἰς τὸ ἀγαθὸν ἀκεραίους δὲ εἰς τὸ κακόν. They appear therefore to belong to the same party to which the passages vi. 1—23, xiv. 1—xv. 6, of that epistle are chiefly addressed. For the profession of 'wisdom' in these faithless disciples of St Paul see 1 Cor. i. 17 sq., iv. 18 sq., viii. 1 sq., x. 15. Compare the note on τέλει above.

περιπατοῦσιν] An adverbial clause, such as οὐκ ὀρθῶς, might have been expected: but in the earnestness of expression the sentence is uninterrupted, the qualifying idea being for the moment dropped. It reappears in a different form in the words τοὺς ἐχθροὺς κ.τ.λ. attached to the dependent sentence οὓς πολλάκις ἔλεγον κ.τ.λ.

νῦν δέ] 'but now', for the evil has grown meanwhile.

καὶ κλαίων] The stress of St Paul's grief would lie in the fact, that they degraded the true doctrine of liberty, so as to minister to their profligate and worldly living. They made use of his name, but did not follow his example.

τοὺς ἐχθροὺς τοῦ σταυροῦ] See Polyc. Phil. § 12. These words do not in themselves decide what persons are here denounced; for the enemies of the cross may be twofold; (1) Doctrinal. The Judaizers, who deny the efficacy of the cross and substitute obedience to a formal code in its place; comp. Gal. v. 11, vi. 12, 14 (2) Practical. The Antinomians, who refuse to conform to the cross (iii. 10, 2 Cor. i. 5, 6) and live a life of self-indulgence; comp. 1 Cor. i. 17. If the view, which I have adopted and which the context seems to require, is correct, the latter are here meant; see the last note. In the passages, Polyc. Phil. 7 ὅς ἂν μὴ ὁμολογῇ τὸ μαρτύριον τοῦ σταυροῦ, Ignat. Trall. 11 ἐφαίνοντο ἂν κλάδοι τοῦ σταυροῦ, the reference is apparently to docetism, as denying the reality of the passion. But belonging to a later generation, these passages throw no light on St Paul's meaning here.

19. τὸ τέλος ἀπώλεια] Comp. Rom. vi. 21 τὸ τέλος ἐκείνων θάνατος: see also 2 Cor. xi. 15, Hebr. vi. 8.

ὁ θεὸς ἡ κοιλία] See Rom. xvi. 18 already quoted: comp. Seneca de Benef. vii. 26 'Alius abdomini servit', Eur. Cycl. 335 θύω...τῇ μεγίστῃ γαστρὶ τῇδε δαιμόνων' ὥς τοῦμπιεύν γε καὶ φαγείν τοῦφ' ἡμέραν Ζεὺς οὗτος ἀνθρώποισι τοῖσι σώφροσιν. So in attacks on Epicurean ethics 'venter' commonly appears as the type of sensual appetites generally, e.g. Cic. Nat. Deor. i. 40, Senec. Vit. Beat. ix. 4, xiv. 3. The Apostle elsewhere reminds these lax brethren, that 'the kingdom of God is not eating and drinking', Rom. xiv. 17; comp. 1 Cor. viii. 8. The self-indulgence, which wounds the tender conscience of others and turns liberty into license, is here condemned.

ἡ δόξα κ.τ.λ.] The unfettered liberty, of which they boast, thus perverted becomes their deepest degradation.

Χριστοῦ, ¹⁹ ὧν τὸ τέλος ἀπώλεια, ὧν ὁ θεὸς ἡ κοιλία, καὶ ἡ δόξα ἐν τῇ αἰσχύνῃ αὐτῶν, οἱ τὰ ἐπίγεια φρονοῦντες. ²⁰ ἡμῶν γὰρ τὸ πολίτευμα ἐν οὐρανοῖς ὑπάρχει, ἐξ οὗ καὶ σωτῆρα ἀπεκδεχόμεθα κύριον Ἰησοῦν Χρισ-

20. ἡμῶν δὲ τὸ πολίτευμα.

Comp. Hosea vii. 8 τὴν δόξαν αὐτῶν εἰς ἀτιμίαν θήσω.

οἱ τὰ ἐπίγεια κ.τ.λ.] 'Men whose minds are set on earthly things!' For the abrupt nominative occurring without any grammatical connexion and expressing amazement, comp. Mark xii. 38—40; see Winer § xxix. p. 196.

20. ἡμῶν γὰρ κ.τ.λ.] 'Their souls are mundane and grovelling. They have no fellowship with us; for we are citizens of a heavenly commonwealth'. The emphatic position of ἡμῶν contrasts the false adherents of St Paul with the true. About the connecting particle there is some difficulty. While the earliest MSS all read γάρ, the earliest citations (with several versions) have persistently δέ. I have therefore given δέ as a possible alternative; although it is probably a substitution for γάρ, of which the connexion was not very obvious.

τὸ πολίτευμα] This may mean either (1) 'The state, the constitution, to which as citizens we belong', e.g. Philo de Jos. ii. p. 51 M ἐγγραφῆς τῆς ἐν τῷ μεγίστῳ καὶ ἀρίστῳ πολιτεύματι τοῦδε τοῦ κόσμου, de Confus. i. p. 421 M ἐγγράφονται τῷ τῆς προτέρας πολιτεύματι, 2 Macc. xii. 7 τὸ σύμπαν τῶν Ἰουδαίων πολίτευμα; or (2) 'The functions which as citizens we perform', e.g. Demosth. de Cor. p. 262 πάντα τὰ τοιαῦτα προηρούμην πολιτεύματα κ.τ.λ., Lucian Prom. 15 ἐπὶ τῷ πολιτεύματι τούτῳ, Tatian ad Græc. 19. The singular points to the former meaning which is also more frequent. In either case ἐξ οὗ 'whence' will refer not to πολίτευμα, but to οὐρανοῖς. On the metaphor see above i. 27. Compare also Philo de Confus. i. p. 416 M πατρί-δα μὲν τὸν οὐράνιον χῶρον ἐν ᾧ πολιτεύονται ξένον δὲ τὸν περιέχον ἐν ᾧ παρῶκησαν νομίζουσai, Epist. ad Diogen. § 5 ἐπὶ γῆς διατρίβουσιν ἀλλ' ἐν οὐρανῷ πολιτεύονται, Clem. Hom. i. 16 αὐτὴ σε ἡ ἀλήθεια ξένον ὄντα τῆς ἰδίας πόλεως καταστήσει πολίτην. See also M. Anton. iii. 11 πολίτην ὄντα πόλεως τῆς ἀνωτάτης ἧς αἱ λοιπαὶ πόλεις ὥσπερ οἰκίας εἰσίν. It was a favourite metaphor with the Stoics, Clem. Alex. Strom. iv. 26 (p. 642 Potter) λέγουσι γὰρ καὶ οἱ Στωικοὶ τὸν μὲν οὐρανὸν κυρίως πόλιν τὰ δὲ ἐπὶ γῆς ἐνταῦθα οὐκ ἔτι πόλεις, λέγεσθαι μὲν γάρ, οὐκ εἶναι δέ κ.τ.λ.; see below p. 303 sq. Somewhat similarly Plato says of his ideal state (Resp. ix. p. 592 B) ἐν οὐρανῷ ἴσως παράδειγμα [τῆς πόλεως] ἀνάκειται τῷ βουλομένῳ ὁρᾶν καὶ ὁρῶντι ἑαυτὸν κατοικίῃ. But the reply of Anaxagoras (Diog. Laert. ii. 7) to one who reproached him with indifference to his countrymen, εὐφήμει, ἐμοὶ γὰρ καὶ σφόδρα μέλει τῆς πατρίδος (δείξας τὸν οὐρανόν), ought not to be quoted in illustration, as it refers to his astronomical studies.

ὑπάρχει] 'is even now', for the kingdom of heaven is a present kingdom; so Ephes. ii. 19 οὐκέτι ἐστὲ ξένοι καὶ πάροικοι ἀλλὰ ἐστὲ συμπολίται τῶν ἁγίων κ.τ.λ. (comp. ver. 6).

σωτῆρα ἀπεκδεχόμεθα] 'we eagerly await as a saviour'. On ἀπεκδέχεσθαι see Gal. v. 5, together with the note on ἀποκαρδοκία above, i. 20.

21. μετασχηματίζει] 'will change the fashion'. For μετασχηματίζει and σύμμορφον see the detached note on μορφή and σχῆμα, p. 128.

τῆς ταπεινώσεως ἡμῶν] 'of our humiliation,' i.e. the body which we bear in our present low estate, which τόν, ²¹ ὃς μετασχηματίσει τὸ σῶμα τῆς ταπεινώσεως ἡμῶν σύμμορφον τῷ σώματι τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ, κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν τοῦ δύνασθαι αὐτὸν καὶ ὑποτάξαι αὐτῷ τὰ πάντα. IV. ¹ ὥστε, ἀδελφοί μου ἀγαπητοὶ καὶ ἐπι-is exposed to all the passions, sufferings, and indignities of this life. The English translation, 'our vile body', seems to countenance the Stoic contempt of the body, of which there is no tinge in the original.

σύμμορφον] 'so as to be conformable', see Winer § lix. p. 550, § lxvi. p. 646. The words εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι αὐτό, occurring before σύμμορφον in the received text, must be struck out as a gloss, though a correct one. This transformation is described at greater length and in other language, 1 Cor. xv. 35—53.

τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ] i.e. with which He is clothed in His glorified estate.

τὴν ἐνέργειαν τοῦ δύνασθαι] 'The exercise of the power which He possesses.' This expression involves the common antithesis of δύναμις and ἐνέργεια; comp. Ephes. i. 19. 'Potentia arbor, efficacia fructus,' says Calvin.

καὶ ὑποτάξαι] 'also to subject'; for this power of subjugating the human body is only one manifestation of the universal sovereignty of Christ. On the subjection of all things to the Son see 1 Cor. xv. 25—27. For τὰ πάντα with the article see the note above ver. 8.

αὐτῷ] i.e. τῷ Χριστῷ, referring to the subject of the principal verb, as e.g. in Acts xxv. 21, Ephes. i. 4. In such connexions the reflexive pronoun ἑαυτοῦ would be required in Classical Greek. In the later language however we find αὐτοῦ etc. in place of ἑαυτοῦ etc. in almost every case, except where it stands as the direct object, the immediate accusative of the verb. See the excellent account of the usage of αὐτὸς and ἑαυτοῦ in A. Buttmann p. 97. In this passage there is not sufficient authority for the reading ἑαυτῷ. The forms αὐτοῦ, αὐτῷ, αὐτόν, have no place in the Greek Testament, as is clearly shown by A. Buttmann l.c. Winer, § xxii. p. 164, speaks hesitatingly.

IV. 1. ὥστε] 'therefore'. 'Bearing these things in mind, living as citizens of a heavenly polity, having this hope of a coming Saviour.'

ἐπιπόθητοι] This adjective does not occur elsewhere in the New Testament: comp. Clem. Rom. 59, Appian. Hisp. 43. The Apostle's love finds expression in the accumulation and repetition of words. In the final ἀγαπητοὶ he seems to linger over this theme, as if unable to break away from it.

χαρὰ καὶ στέφανός μου] He uses the same language in addressing the other great Macedonian church, 1 Thess. ii. 19. The word στέφανος 'a chaplet' must be carefully distinguished from διάδημα 'a regal or priestly diadem'. To the references given in Trench N.T. Syn. 1st ser. § xxiii. add. Is. lxii. 3 στέφανος κάλλους ... καὶ διάδημα βασιλείας, Test. xii Patr. Levi 8 ὁ ἔκτος στέφανόν μοι τῇ κεφαλῇ περιέθηκεν, ὁ ἔβδομος διάδημα τῇ κεφαλῇ μοι ἱερατείας περιέθηκε, Diod. Sic. xx. 54 διάδημα μὲν οὐκ ἔκρινεν ἔχειν, ἐφόρει γὰρ αἰεὶ στέφανον. Thus the idea conveyed by στέφανος is not dominion, but either (1) victory, or (2) merriment, as the wreath was worn equally by the conqueror and by the holiday-maker. Without excluding the latter notion, the former seems to be prominent in this and in the parallel passage; for there, as here, the Apostle refers in the context to the Lord's coming. His converts will then be his wreath of victory, for it will appear that he οὐκ εἰς κενὸν ἔδραμεν (ii. 16), and he will receive the successful athlete's reward; comp. 1 Cor. ix. 25:

πόθητοι, χαρὰ καὶ στέφανός μου, οὕτως στήκετε ἐν κυρίῳ, ἀγαπητοί.

²Εὐδοίαν παρακαλῶ καὶ Συντύχην παρακαλῶ τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν ἐν κυρίῳ. ³ναὶ ἐρωτῶ καὶ σέ, γνήσιε σύνοὔτως στήκετε] ‘stand fast so, as you are guided by my precept and my example, as becomes citizens of a heavenly kingdom.’ On στήκετε see the notes, i. 27, Gal. v. 1.

2. The Apostle at length returns from his long digression (see the notes on iii. 1, 2) to the subject of the dissensions at Philippi. His injunctions here take the form of a direct personal appeal to those chiefly at fault; and two ladies especially are mentioned by name.

2, 3. ‘I appeal to Euodia, and I appeal to Syntyche, to give up their differences and live at peace in the Lord. Yes I ask you, my faithful and true yokefellow, who are now by my side, who will deliver this letter to the Philippians, to reconcile them again: for I cannot forget how zealously they seconded my efforts on behalf of the Gospel. I invite Clement also, with the rest of my fellow-labourers, whose names are enrolled in the book of life, the register of God’s faithful people, to aid in this work of reconciliation.’

Εὐδοίαν κ.τ.λ.] Both these names occur in the inscriptions: Euhodia or Euodia for instance in Gruter p. 695. 4, p. 789. 5, Muratori p. 107. 9, p. 932. 5, p. 1161. 4, p. 1185. 7, p. 1340. 8, p. 1362. 2, p. 1671. 3, 5 (comp. Tertull. ad Scap. 4); Syntyche, Sunttyche, or Syntiche, in Gruter p. 890. 7, p. 987. 8, Muratori, p. 857. 7, p. 972. 5, p. 1315. 17, p. 1569. 4, p. 1664. 4. The English Version treats the first as a man’s name; and others have in like manner interpreted the second. No instance however of either ‘Euodias’ or ‘Syntyches’ has been found in the inscriptions. The former indeed might be considered a contraction of Euodianus which occurs occasionally: but the masculine form of the latter is Syntychus, a very rare name (Gruter p. 372. 5). But, though it were possible to treat the words in themselves as masculine, two female names are clearly required here, as there is nothing else in the sentence to which αὐταῖς can be referred. Euodia and Syntyche appear to have been ladies of rank, or possibly (like Phoebe, Rom. xvi. 1) deaconesses in the Philippian church. On the position of women in Macedonia and on their prominence in the history of the Gospel there, see the introduction, p. 54 sq.

παρακαλῶ] St Paul repeats the word as if, says Bengel, ‘coram adhortans seorsum utramvis.’

3. ναὶ ‘yea,’ introducing an affectionate appeal, as Philem. 20 ναὶ, ἀδελφέ, ἐγὼ σου δναιμην. The καὶ of the received text must be considered a misprint, or a miswriting of a few late MSS.

ἐρωτῶ] ‘I ask’; a late use of the word which in the classical language signifies not ‘rogo’ generally, but ‘interrogo’ specially. In this late sense of ‘requesting,’ ἐρωτῶ differs from αἰτῶ, as ‘rogo’ from ‘peto’; the two former being used towards an equal, the two latter towards a superior; see Trench N. T. Syn. 1st ser. § xl.

γνήσιε σύνζυγε] ‘true yoke-fellow,’ comp. Æsch. Ag. 842; so 2 Cor. vi. 14 ἑτεροζυγοῦντες. It is doubtful whom the Apostle thus addresses. On the whole however it seems most probable that Epaphroditus, the bearer of the letter, is intended; for in his case alone there would be no risk of making the reference unintelligible by the suppression of the name. Different commentators have explained it of Barnabas, of Luke, of Silas, of Timotheus, of ζυγε, συναμβάνου αὐταῖς, αἵτινες ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ συνήθλησάν μοι, μετὰ καὶ Κλήμεντος καὶ τῶν λοιπῶν συνεργῶν μου, ὧν τὰ ὀνόματα ἐν βίβλῳ ζωῆς.

⁴ Χαίρετε ἐν κυρίῳ πάντοτε· πάλιν ἐρῶ, χαίρετε.

the chief presbyter or bishop of Philippi. Others again have taken Σύνζυγος itself as a proper name, explaining γνήσιε 'truly called.' The case for this interpretation is well stated by Laurent Neutest. Stud. p. 134. It would be plausible, if Σύνζυγος occurred commonly, or occurred at all, in the inscriptions. The passage would then present a parallel to the play on the name Onesimus in Philem. 11. Less can be said in favour of another expedient which makes Γνήσιος the proper name. A very ancient interpretation again (Clem. Alex. Strom. iii. p. 535 Potter, Orig. Rom. i. p. 461 Delarue) takes 'yokefellow' to mean St Paul's wife; but the Apostle would doubtless have written γνήσια in this case, and it seems clear moreover from 1 Cor. vii. 8 that he was either unmarried or a widower. The grammatical objection applies equally to Renan's suggestion (St Paul p. 148) that Lydia is meant. For γνήσιε comp. Eccus. vii. 18, and see the note on γνήσιος ii. 20.

συναμβάνου, κ.τ.λ.] 'assist them, Euodia and Syntyche, since they laboured with me etc.' They may have belonged to the company of women to whom the Gospel was first preached at Philippi, Acts xvi. 13 ταῖς συνελθούσαις γυναῖξιν. For αἵτινες, 'inasmuch as they,' comp. e.g. Acts x. 41, 47, Rom. ii. 15, vi. 2, etc. While ὅς simply marks the individual, ὅστις places him in a class, and thus calls attention to certain characteristic features; hence the meaning 'quippe qui.' On the distinction of ὅς and ὅστις see the notes on Gal. iv. 24, 26, v. 19. The rendering adopted by the English version, 'Help those women who laboured etc.' is obviously incorrect, and would require ἐκείναις αἱ συνήθλησαν.

μετὰ καὶ Κλήμεντος κ.τ.λ.] 'with Clement also.' These words ought perhaps to be connected rather with συναμβάνου αὐταῖς than with συνήθλησάν μοι. The Apostle is anxious to engage all in the work of conciliation. On the Clement here meant see the detached note p. 166. The καὶ before Κλήμεντος seems to be retrospective (referring to γνήσιε σύνζυγε) rather than prospective (referring to καὶ τῶν λοιπῶν συνεργῶν μου); as in John ii. 2. For its position comp. Clem. Rom. § 59 σὺν καὶ Φορτουνάτῳ.

ὧν τὰ ὀνόματα κ.τ.λ.] 'whose names, though not mentioned by the Apostle, are nevertheless in the book of life.' The 'book of life' in the figurative language of the Old Testament is the register of the covenant people: comp. Is. iv. 3 οἱ γραφέντες εἰς ζωὴν ἐν Ἱερουσαλὴμ, Ezek. xiii. 9 ἐν παιδείᾳ τοῦ λαοῦ μου οὐκ ἔσονται οὐδὲ ἐν γραφῇ οἴκου Ἰσραὴλ οὐ γραφήσονται. Hence 'to be blotted out of the book of the living' means 'to forfeit the privileges of the theocracy,' 'to be shut out from God's favour,' Ps. lxi. 28; comp. Exod. xxxii. 32. But the expression, though perhaps confined originally to temporal blessings, was in itself a witness to higher hopes; and in the book of Daniel first (xii. 1 sq.) it distinctly refers to a blessed immortality. In the Revelation τὸ βιβλίον τῆς ζωῆς is a phrase of constant recurrence, iii. 5, xiii. 8, xvii. 8, xx. 12, 15, xxi. 27, xxii. 19; comp. Hermas Vis. i. 3. See also Luke x. 20, Heb. xii. 23. It is clear from the expression 'blotting out of the book' (Rev. iii. 5), that the image suggested no idea of absolute predestination. For the use of the phrase in rabbinical writers see Wetstein here.

4. χαίρετε] This word combines a

⁵ τὸ ἐπεικὲς ὑμῶν γνωσθήτω πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις. ὁ κύριος ἐγγύς. ὁ μὴδὲν μεριμνᾶτε, ἀλλ' ἐν παντὶ τῇ προσευχῇ καὶ τῇ δέήσει μετ' εὐχαριστίας τὰ αἰτήματα ὑμῶν γνωρίζεσθω πρὸς τὸν Θεόν. ἡ καὶ ἡ εἰρήνη τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡ

parting benediction with an exhortation to cheerfulness. It is neither 'farewell' alone, nor 'rejoice' alone. Compare for this same combination of senses the dying words of the Greek messenger χαίρετε καὶ χαίρομεν quoted above on ii. 18; see the notes on ii. 18, iii. 1.

πάλιν ἐρῶ] 'again I will say'; for ἐρῶ seems to be always a future in the New Testament as in Attic Greek. Compare Æsch. Eum. 1014 χαίρετε, χαίρετε δ' αὖθις, ἐπανδιπλοίζω. See the notes on i. 4.

5—7. 'Let your gentle and forbearing spirit be recognised by all men. The judgment is drawing near. Entertain no anxious cares, but throw them all upon God. By your prayer and your supplication make your every want known to Him. If you do this, then the peace of God, far more effective than any forethought or contrivance of man, will keep watch over your hearts and your thoughts in Christ Jesus.'

5. τὸ ἐπεικὲς ὑμῶν] 'your forbearance,' the opposite to a spirit of contention and self-seeking. The ἐπεικὴς stands in contrast to the ἀκριβοδίκαιος, as being satisfied with less than his due, Arist. Eth. Nic. v. 10. The word is connected with ἄμαχος, πᾶσαν ἐνδεκνύμενος πρᾶτῆτα (Tit. iii. 2, comp. 1 Tim. iii. 3), with εἰρηνικός, εὐπειθής, μεστός ἐλέους κ.τ.λ. (James iii. 17), with χρηστός, πολυέλεος (Ps. lxxv. 5), with ἀγαθός ('kind', 1 Pet. ii. 18), with φιλόανθρωπος (2 Macc. ix. 27). This quality of ἐπείκεια was signally manifested in our blessed Lord Himself (2 Cor. x. 1).

ὁ κύριος ἐγγύς] The nearness of the Lord's advent is assigned as a reason for patient forbearance. So similarly in St James v. 8, μακροθυμήσατε καὶ ὑμεῖς... ὅτι ἡ παρουσία τοῦ κυρίου ἤγγικεν κ.τ.λ. The expression ὁ κύριος ἐγγύς is the Apostle's watchword. In 1 Cor. xvi. 22 an Aramaic equivalent is given, Μαράν ἀθά, whence we may infer that it was a familiar form of mutual recognition and warning in the early Church. Compare Barnab. § 21 ἐγγύς ἡ ἡμέρα ἐν ᾗ συναπολείται πάντα τῷ ποιηρῷ, ἐγγύς ὁ κύριος καὶ ὁ μισθὸς αὐτοῦ. See also Luke xxi. 31, 1 Pet. iv. 7. Thus we may paraphrase St Paul's language here: 'To what purpose is this rivalry, this self-assertion? The end is nigh, when you will have to resign all. Bear with others now, that God may bear with you then.' On the other hand a different interpretation is suggested by such passages as Ps. cxix. 151 ἐγγύς εἰ κύριε, cxlv. 18 ἐγγύς κύριος πᾶσι τοῖς ἐπικαλουμένοις αὐτόν (comp. xxxiv. 18), Clem. Rom. § 21 ἴδωμεν πῶς ἐγγύς ἐστὶν κ.τ.λ. (comp. Hermas Vis. ii. 3); but this is neither so natural nor so appropriate here.

6. μὴδὲν μεριμνᾶτε] 'have no anxieties'; for μέριμνα is anxious harassing care. See Trench, On the Authorized Version p. 13 sq. (on Matt. vi. 25): and comp. 1 Pet. v. 7, where μέριμνα is used of human anxieties, μέλει of God's providential care.

τῇ προσευχῇ κ.τ.λ.] While προσευχῇ is the general offering up of the wishes and desires to God, δέησις implies special petition for the supply of wants. Thus προσευχῇ points to the frame of mind in the petitioner, δέησις to the act of solicitation. The two occur together also in Ephes. vi. 18, 1 Tim. ii. 1, v. 5. In αἰτήματα again the several objects of δέησις are implied. More on the distinction of these words may be seen in Trench, N. T. Syn. 2nd ser. § 1.

ὑπερέχουσα πάντα νοῦν φρουρήσει τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν καὶ τὰ νοήματα ὑμῶν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ.

⁸Τὸ λοιπόν, ἀδελφοί, ὅσα ἐστὶν ἀληθῆ, ὅσα σεμνά, ὅσα δίκαια, ὅσα ἀγνά, ὅσα προσφιλῆ, ὅσα εὐφημα, εἰ πρὸς τὸν Θεόν] ‘before God’, ‘to Godward’, not simply τῷ Θεῷ.

μετ’ εὐχαριστίας] Since thankfulness for past blessings is a necessary condition of acceptance in preferring new petitions. Great stress is laid on the duty of εὐχαριστία by St Paul; e.g. Rom. i. 21, xiv. 6, 2 Cor. i. 11, iv. 15, ix. 11, 12, Ephes. v. 20, Col. ii. 7, iii. 17, 1 Thess. v. 18, 1 Tim. ii. 1. All his own letters addressed to churches, with the sole exception of the Epistle to the Galatians, commence with an emphatic thanksgiving. In this epistle the injunction is in harmony with the repeated exhortations to cheerfulness (χαρά) which it contains; see the note on i. 4.

7. καὶ ἡ εἰρήνη κ.τ.λ.] ‘then the peace of God’; again an indirect allusion to their dissensions. So too in ver. 9 ὁ Θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης. Compare 2 Thess. iii. 16 αὐτὸς δὲ ὁ κύριος τῆς εἰρήνης δώῃ ὑμῖν τὴν εἰρήνην κ.τ.λ.

ὑπερέχουσα κ.τ.λ.] ‘surpassing every device or counsel’ of man, i.e. which is far better, which produces a higher satisfaction, than all punctilious self-assertion, all anxious forethought. This sense seems better adapted to the context, than the meaning frequently assigned to the words, ‘surpassing all intelligence, transcending all power of conception.’ In favour of the latter however may be quoted Ephes. iii. 20 τῷ δυναμένῳ ὑπὲρ πάντα ποιῆσαι ὑπερεκπερισσοῦ ὧν αἰτούμεθα ἡ νοοῦμεν.

φρουρήσει κ.τ.λ.] A verbal paradox, for φρουρεῖν is a warrior’s duty; ‘God’s peace shall stand sentry, shall keep guard over your hearts.’ Compare 1 Thess. iv. 11 φιλοτιμείσθαι ἡσυχάζειν for a similar instance. The νοήματα reside in and issue from the καρδίαι (comp. 2 Cor. iii. 14, 15); for in the Apostle’s language καρδία is the seat of thought as well as of feeling.

8. Τὸ λοιπόν] ‘Finally.’ Again the Apostle attempts to conclude; see the note on τὸ λοιπόν iii. 1, and the introduction, p. 68 sq.

ὅσα ἐστὶν ἀληθῆ κ.τ.λ.] Speaking roughly, the words may be said to be arranged in a descending scale. The first four describe the character of the actions themselves, the two former ἀληθῆ, σεμνά, being absolute, the two latter δίκαια, ἀγνά, relative; the fifth and sixth προσφιλῆ, εὐφημα, point to the moral approbation which they conciliate; while the seventh and eighth ἀρετῆ, ἔπαινος, in which the form of expression is changed (εἴτις for ὅσα), are thrown in as an afterthought, that no motive may be omitted.

ἀληθῆ] not ‘veracious’, but ‘true’ in the widest sense. So St Chrysostom, ταῦτα ὡτως ἀληθῆ ἢ ἀρετῆ, ψεῦδος δὲ ἡ κακία. In like manner the most comprehensive meaning must be given to δίκαια (‘righteous’, not simply ‘just’), and to ἀγνά (‘pure, stainless’ not simply ‘chaste’): comp. Cic. Fin. iii. 4 ‘Una virtus, unum istud, quod honestum appellas, rectum, laudabile, decorum, erit enim notius quale sit, pluribus notatum vocabulis idem declarantibus’.

προσφιλῆ] ‘amiable, lovely’; see Eccles. iv. 7, xx. 13. It does not occur elsewhere in the New Testament. Comp. Cic. Lael. 28 ‘Nihil est amabilius virtute, nihil quod magis alliciat ad diligendum.’

εὐφημα] not ‘well-spoken of, well-reputed’, for the word seems never to have this passive meaning; but with its usual active sense, ‘fair-speaking,’ and so ‘winning, attractive.’ Com-τις ἀρετὴ καὶ εἴ τις ἔπαινος, ταῦτα λογίζεσθε. ὁ δὲ καὶ ἐμάθετε καὶ παρελάβετε καὶ ἠκούσατε καὶ εἶδετε ἐν ἐμοί, ταῦτα πράσσετε, καὶ ὁ Θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης ἔσται μεθ' ὑμῶν.

¹⁰ Ἐχάρην δὲ ἐν κυρίῳ μεγάλως, ὅτι ἤδη ποτὲ ἀνεpare Plut. Vit. Thes. 20 ἃ δὲ εὐφημότατα τῶν μυθολογουμένων, Mor. 84 D τιμὴν εὐφημον, Lucian Prom. 3 πρὸς τὸ εὐφημότατον ἐξηγουμένους τὸ εἰρημένον, i.e. putting the most favourable construction on the account.

εἴ τις ἀρετῇ] St Paul seems studiously to avoid this common heathen term for moral excellence, for it occurs in this passage only. Neither is it found elsewhere in the New Testament, except in 1 Pet. ii. 9, 2 Pet. i. 3, 5, in all which passages it seems to have some special sense. In the Old Testament it always signifies 'glory, praise' (as in 1 Pet. ii. 9); though in the Apocrypha (e.g. Wisd. iv. 1) it has its ordinary classical sense. Its force here is doubtful. Some treat εἴ τις ἀρετῇ, εἴ τις ἔπαινος, as comprehensive expressions, recapitulating the previous subjects under two general heads, the intrinsic character and the subjective estimation. The strangeness of the word however, combined with the change of expression εἴ τις, will suggest another explanation; 'Whatever value may reside in your old heathen conception of virtue, whatever consideration is due to the praise of men'; as if the Apostle were anxious not to omit any possible ground of appeal. Thus Beza's remark on ἀρετῇ seems to be just; 'Verbum nimis humile, si cum donis Spiritus Sancti comparetur.' With this single occurrence of ἀρετῇ, compare the solitary use of τὸ θεῖον in the address on the Areopagus, Acts xvii. 29.

9. In the former verse the proper subjects of meditation (λογίζεσθε) have been enumerated; in the present the proper line of action (πράσσετε) is indicated. The Philippians must obey the Apostle's precepts (ἃ ἐμάθετε καὶ παρελάβετε) and follow his example (ἃ ἠκούσατε καὶ εἶδετε ἐν ἐμοί).

καὶ ἐμάθετε κ.τ.λ.] The verbs should probably be connected together in pairs, so that the καὶ before ἐμάθετε is answered by the καὶ before ἠκούσατε. With ἐμάθετε καὶ παρελάβετε we may understand παρ' ἐμοῦ from the ἐν ἐμοί of the next clause. The word παρελάβετε adds little to ἐμάθετε, except the reference to the person communicating the instruction: comp. Plat. Theæt. p. 198 B παραλαμβάνοντα δὲ μανθάνειν.

ἐν ἐμοί] to be attached to ἠκούσατε, as well as to εἶδετε; 'heard when I was away, and saw when I was with you': comp. i. 30 οἷον εἶδετε ἐν ἐμοί καὶ νῦν ἀκούετε ἐν ἐμοί.

10—19. 'It was a matter of great and holy joy to me that after so long an interval your care on my behalf revived and flourished again. I do not mean that you ever relaxed your care, but the opportunity was wanting. Do not suppose, that in saying this I am complaining of want; for I have learnt to be content with my lot, whatever it may be. I know how to bear humiliation, and I know also how to bear abundance. Under all circumstances and in every case, in plenty and in hunger, in abundance and in want, I have been initiated in the never-failing mystery, I possess the true secret of life. I can do and bear all things in Christ who inspires me with strength. But, though I am thus indifferent to my own wants, I commend you for your sympathy and aid in my affliction. I need not remind you, my Philippian friends; you yourselves will remember; that in the first days of the Gospel, when I left

θάλετε τὸ ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ φρονεῖν· ἐφ' ᾧ καὶ ἐφρονεῖτε, ἡκαιρεῖσθε δέ. ¹¹ οὐχ ὅτι καθ' ὑστέρησιν λέγω· ἐγὼ γὰρ ἔμαθον ἐν οἷς εἰμὶ αὐτάρκης εἶναι. ¹² οἶδα καὶ ταπεινοῦσθαι, οἶδα καὶ περισσεύειν. ἐν παντὶ καὶ ἐν πᾶσιν

Macedonia, though I would not receive contributions of money from any other Church, I made an exception in your case. Nay, even before I left, when I was still at Thessalonica, you sent more than once to supply my wants. Again I say, I do not desire the gift, but I do desire that the fruits of your benevolence should redound to your account. For myself, I have now enough and more than enough of all things. The presents which you sent by Epaphroditus have fully supplied my needs. I welcome them, as the sweet savour of a burnt-offering, as a sacrifice accepted by and well-pleasing to God. And I am confident that God on my behalf will recompense you and supply all your wants with the prodigal wealth which He only can command, in the kingdom of His glory, in Christ Jesus.'

10. ἐχάρην δὲ κ.τ.λ.] So Polycarp writing to these same Philippians begins (§ 1) συνεχάρην ὑμῖν μεγάλως ἐν κυρίῳ ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ κ.τ.λ. The δὲ arrests a subject which is in danger of escaping: see Gal. iv. 20. It is as if the Apostle said: 'I must not forget to thank you for your gift.'

ἤδη ποτὲ ἀνεθάλετε κ.τ.λ.] 'at length ye revived your interest in me.' For ἤδη ποτέ 'at length' (not necessarily referring to present time) see Rom. i. 10, with the passages quoted in illustration by Kypke. For this construction of ἀναθάλλειν, 'to put forth new shoots,' with an accusative of the thing germinated, compare Ezek. xvii. 24 (ξύλον ξηρόν), Eccles. i. 18 (εἰρήνην, ὑγίειαν), xi. 22 (εὐλογίαν), l. 10 (καρπούς). As the two expressions ἤδη ποτέ and ἀνεθάλετε combined might seem to convey a rebuke, the Apostle hastens to remove the impression by the words which follow, ἐφ' ᾧ καὶ ἐφρονεῖτε and οὐχ ὅτι καθ' ὑστέρησιν λέγω.

ἐφ' ᾧ κ.τ.λ.] 'in which ye did indeed interest yourselves.' The antecedent to ᾧ is 'my wants, my interests,' being involved in, though not identical with, τὸ ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ φρονεῖν. Such grammatical irregularities are characteristic of St Paul's style: compare for instance ii. 5. To obviate the fancied difficulty, it has been proposed to explain the previous clause [ὥστε] φρονεῖν τὸ ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ, in which case τὸ ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ would form a strict antecedent to ᾧ. But the separation of τὸ ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ from φρονεῖν is harsh and unnatural.

ἡκαιρεῖσθε] 'ye had no opportunity'; a late and rare word. The active ἀκαιρεῖν is found in Diod. Sic. Exc. p. 30 (Mai).

11. οὐχ ὅτι] 'It is not that I speak, etc.' For οὐχ ὅτι comp. iii. 12, iv. 17: see A. Buttmann p. 319. For καθ' ὑστέρησιν, 'in language dictated by want,' comp. Rom. x. 2 κατ' ἐπίγνωσιν, Acts iii. 17 κατὰ ἄγνοιαν, etc.: see Winer § xlix. p. 421.

ἐν οἷς εἰμὶ κ.τ.λ.] 'in the position in which I am placed.' The idea of αὐτάρχεια is 'independence of external circumstances.' Compare 2 Cor. ix. 8 ἐν παντὶ πάντοτε πᾶσαν αὐτάρχειαν ἔχοντες, 1 Tim. vi. 6. Socrates, when asked 'Who was the wealthiest,' replied, 'He that is content with least, for αὐτάρχεια is nature's wealth' (Stob. Flor. v. 43). The Stoics especially laid great stress on this virtue: see Senec. Ep. Mor. 9 (passim). So M. Anton. i. 16 τὸ αἰσθαρκες ἐν παντί, where also an-μεμύημαι, καὶ χορτάζεσθαι καὶ πεινᾶν, καὶ περισσεύειν καὶ ὑστερεῖσθαι. ¹³ πάντα ἰσχύω ἐν τῷ ἐνδυναμοῦντί με. ¹⁴ πλὴν καλῶς ἐποιήσατε συνκοινωνήσαντές μου τῇ θλί-

other phrase found in St Paul (2 Tim. iv. 5) occurs in the context, νήφον ἐν πᾶσι. See the notes on πολίτευμα iii. 20, and on ἀπέχειν iv. 18, and the dissertation on 'St Paul and Seneca.'

12. καὶ ταπεινούσθαι] This clause seems to be shaped in anticipation of the καὶ περισσεύειν which follows, so that the one καὶ would answer the other, 'both to be abased and to abound'; but the connexion is afterwards interrupted by the repetition of οἶδα for the sake of emphasis. So too perhaps 1 Cor. xv. 29, 30 τί καὶ βαπτίζονται... τί καὶ ἡμεῖς κ.τ.λ.; comp. Rom. i. 13.

ἐν παντὶ καὶ ἐν πᾶσιν] A general expression corresponding to the English 'all and every'; ἐν παντὶ 'in every case' singly, ἐν πᾶσιν 'in all cases' collectively: comp. 2 Cor. xi. 6 ἐν παντὶ φανερώσαντες ἐν πᾶσιν εἰς ὑμᾶς. + μεμύημαι] 'I have been initiated, I possess the secret,' as Plut. Mor. p. 795 B τὰ μὲν πρῶτα μανθάνων ἔτι πολιτεύεσθαι καὶ μνούμενος, τὰ δὲ ἔσχατα διδάσκων καὶ μυσταγωγῶν, Alciaphr. Epist. ii. 4 προωρατεύειν μνηθῆσομαι. The same metaphor is employed by St Paul in μυστήρια applied to revealed truths, and perhaps also in σφραγίζεσθαι (Eph. i. 13). The writer of the Ignatian Epistles addresses the Ephesians (§ 12) as Παύλου συμμύσται τοῦ ἡγιασμένου, thus taking up the Apostle's own metaphor.

χορτάζεσθαι] The word χορτάζειν, properly 'to give fodder to animals,' is in the first instance only applied to men as a depreciatory term, e.g. Plat. Resp. ix. p. 586 A βοσκημάτων δίκην... χορταζόμενοι. Hence the earlier examples of this application are found chiefly in the Comic poets, as in the passages quoted by Athenæus, iii. p. 99 sq., where the word is discussed. In the later language however χορτάζεσθαι has lost the sense of caricature, and become a serious equivalent to κορένυσθαι, being applied commonly to men and directly opposed to πεινᾶν, e.g. Matt. v. 6. On χορτάζειν see Sturz de Dial. Mac. p. 200. A parallel instance of a word casting off all mean associations in the later language is ψωμίζειν, 1 Cor. xiii. 3.

πεινᾶν] On this form see A. Buttmann p. 38, Lobeck Phryn. p. 61.

13. τῷ ἐνδυναμοῦντί με] 'in Him that infuses strength into me,' i.e. Christ: comp. 1 Tim. i. 12. The word occurs several times in St Paul.

14. πλὴν] 'nevertheless, though I could have dispensed with your contributions.'

συνκοινωνήσαντες κ.τ.λ.] i.e. 'by making common cause with my affliction, by your readiness to share the burden of my troubles.' It was not the actual pecuniary relief, so much as the sympathy and companionship in his sorrow, that the Apostle valued. On the construction of κοινωνεῖν see the note on Gal. vi. 6.

15. The object of this allusion seems to be not so much to stimulate them by recalling their former zeal in contributing to his needs, as to show his willingness to receive such contributions at their hands. 'Do not mistake my meaning,' he seems to say, 'do not imagine that I receive your gifts coldly, that I consider them intrusive. You yourselves will recollect that, though it was my rule not to receive such contributions, I made an exception in your case.'

καὶ ὑμεῖς] 'ye too, ye yourselves, without my reminding you': comp. 1 Thess. ii. 1 αὐτοὶ γὰρ οἶδατε, ἀδελφοί.

Φιλιππησίου] Stephanus Byzant. says, 'Ὁ πολίτης Φιλιππεύς, Φιλιππηνός δὲ

ψει. ¹⁵ οἶδατε δὲ καὶ ὑμεῖς, Φιλιππηῖοι, ὅτι ἐν ἀρχῇ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, ὅτε ἐξῆλθον ἀπὸ Μακεδονίας, οὐδεμία μοι ἐκκλησία ἐκοινώνησεν εἰς λόγον δόσεως καὶ λήψεως, παρὰ Πολυβίῳ. The passage of Polybius to which he refers is not extant. Though Stephanus does not mention the form Φιλιππηῖος, it occurs in the heading of Polycarp's letter (Iren. iii. 3. 4) as well as of this epistle. Φιλιππεὺς is found three times in a Bœotian inscription in Keil p. 172 (see Dindorf's Steph. Thes. s. v.).

ἐν ἀρχῇ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου] 'in the earliest days of the Gospel,' especially in reference to Macedonia. Similarly, writing to the Thessalonians soon after his first visit, St Paul says (2 Thess. ii. 13) εἴλατο ὑμᾶς ὁ Θεὸς ἀπαρχὴν (v. l. ἀπ' ἀρχῆς) εἰς σωτηρίαν. The expression occurs in Clem. Rom. § 47 τί πρῶτον ὑμῖν ἐν ἀρχῇ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου ἔγραψεν, and possibly this is the meaning of Polycarp § 11 'qui estis in principio epistolæ ejus': see above, p. 139, note 3.

ὅτε ἐξῆλθον ἀπὸ Μακεδονίας] 'when I departed from Macedonia' may mean either (1) 'at the moment of my departure,' or (2) 'after my departure.' This latter meaning is justified by the pluperfect sense which the aorist frequently has (see Winer, § xl. p. 290); though in fact this is no peculiarity of Greek, but a looseness of expression common to all languages. If this meaning be adopted, the allusion is explained by the contributions sent from Macedonia to Corinth (2 Cor. xi. 8, 9). If on the other hand the former sense were rigorously pressed (though this is unreasonable), contributions might well have been conveyed to him through 'the brethren' who escorted him from Macedonia to Athens, Acts xvii. 14, 15. The 'undesigned coincidence' between the history and the epistles in the matter of these contributions is well put by Paley (Hor. Paul. vii. no. 1).

εἰς λόγον κ.τ.λ.] 'as regards'; literally 'to the account or score of'; comp. Thuc. iii. 46 εἰς χρημάτων λόγον ἰσχυνοῦσαι, Demosth. F. L. p. 385 εἰς ἀρετῆς λόγον καὶ δόξης ἦν οὗτοι χρημάτων ἀπέδοντο, Polyb. xi. 28. 8 εἰς ἀργυρίου λόγον ἀδικεῖσθαι. In the passages quoted, as here, the original application to a money transaction is kept more or less distinctly in view; but this is not always the case, e.g. Polyb. v. 89. 6 ξύλα εἰς σφηκίσκων λόγον. With the expression here compare Cic. Læli. 16 'ratio acceptorum et datorum.'

δόσεως καὶ λήψεως] 'giving and taking,' 'credit and debit,' a general expression for pecuniary transactions, derived from the two sides of the ledger: see Ecclus. xlii. 7 καὶ δόσις καὶ λήψις παντὶ ἐν γραφῇ, xli. 19 ἀπὸ σκορακισμοῦ λήψεως καὶ δόσεως, Arrian. Epict. ii. 9 τὸν φιλάργυρον [ἐπαύξουσιν] αἱ ἀκατάλληλοι λήψεις καὶ δόσεις, Hermas Mand. v. 2 περὶ δόσεως ἢ λήψεως ἢ περὶ τοιούτων μαρῶν πραγμάτων. The phrase refers solely to the passing of money between the two. The explanation given by St Chrysostom and followed by many later writers, εἰς λόγον δόσεως τῶν σαρκικῶν καὶ λήψεως τῶν πνευματικῶν (the Philippians paying worldly goods and receiving spiritual), is plainly inappropriate; for the intermingling of different things destroys the whole force of the clause εἰς λόγον δόσεως καὶ λήψεως, which is added to define the kind of contributions intended.

εἰ μὴ ὑμεῖς μόνοι] So, speaking of this same period, he asks the Corinthians whether he did them a wrong in taking no contributions from them and preaching the Gospel to them gratuitously (2 Cor. xi. 7). The limitation ἐν ἀρχῇ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου perhaps εἰ μὴ ὑμεῖς μόνοι, ¹⁶ ὅτι καὶ ἐν Θεσσαλονίκῃ καὶ ἅπαξ καὶ δις [εἰς] τὴν χρεῖαν μοι ἐπέμψατε. ¹⁷ οὐχ ὅτι ἐπιζητῶ τὸ δόμα, ἀλλὰ ἐπιζητῶ τὸν καρπὸν τὸν πλεονάζοντα εἰς λόγον ὑμῶν. ¹⁸ ἀπέχω δὲ πάντα καὶ περισσεύω, πεπληρωμαι δεξάμενος παρὰ Ἐπαφροδίτου τὰ παρ' ὑμῶν, ὅσμην εὐωδίας, θυσίαν δεκτὴν εὐάρεστον τῷ Θεῷ. ¹⁹ ὁ δὲ Θεός μου πληρώσει πᾶσαν χρεῖαν ὑμῶν κατὰ τὸ πλοῦτος αὐτοῦ ἐν δόξῃ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ.

implies that he relaxed his rule later, when he became better known and understood.

16. ὅτι καὶ κ.τ.λ. [for not only did you contribute to my wants after my departure from Macedonia, but also in Thessalonica, before I left etc.] So St Paul himself reminds the Thessalonians (1 Thess. ii. 5, 2 Thess. iii. 8) that he did not burden them at all. At the same time it appears from those passages, that his bodily wants were supplied mainly by the labours of his own hands. Thus it would seem that the gifts of the Philippians were only occasional, and the same may be gathered from the words καὶ ἅπαξ καὶ δις here. On the abbreviated expression ἐν Θεσσαλονίκῃ 'when I was in Thessalonica' see Winer § 1. p. 433; comp. below, ver. 19.

καὶ ἅπαξ καὶ δις ['more than once': comp. 1 Thess. ii. 18. The double καὶ is common in such cases, e.g. καὶ δις καὶ τρίς, Plat. Phæd. p. 63 D.

εἰς τὴν χρεῖαν ['to relieve my want', the preposition indicating the object; see Winer § xlix. p. 415. The omission of εἰς in some old copies is probably due to the similar ending of the preceding word. Otherwise the reading might claim to be adopted, though in this sense the plural τὰς χρείας would be more natural.

17. Again the Apostle's nervous anxiety to clear himself interposes. By thus enlarging on the past liberality of the Philippians, he might be thought to covet their gifts. This possible misapprehension he at once corrects.

οὐχ ὅτι ἐπιζητῶ] For οὐχ ὅτι see the notes on ver. 11 and on iii. 12; for the indirectly intensive force of the preposition in ἐπιζητῶ, the note on ἐπιποθῶ i. 8. The repetition of ἐπιζητῶ is emphatic; 'I do not want the gift, I do want the fruit etc.' Compare the repetition of παρακαλῶ ver. 2, and of οἶδα ver. 12.

τὸν καρπὸν κ.τ.λ.] 'i.e. the recompense which is placed to your account and increases with each fresh demonstration of your love.'

18. ἀπέχω κ.τ.λ.] ['I have all things to the full', as Matt. vi. 2, 5, 16, Luke vi. 24. For the phrase ἀπέχειν πάντα compare Arrian. Epict. iii. 2. 13 ἀπέχεις ἅπαντα, iii. 24. 17 τὸ γὰρ εὐδαιμονοῦν ἀπέχειν δεῖ πάντα ἃ θέλει πεπληρωμένῳ τινὶ εὐκνέαι: comp. Diog. Laert. vii. 100 καλὸν δὲ λέγουσι τὸ τέλειον ἀγαθὸν παρὰ τὸ πάντας ἀπέχειν τοὺς ἐπιζητουμένους ἀριθμοὺς ὑπὸ τῆς φύσεως κ.τ.λ. See also Gataker on M. Anton. iv. 49. Like αὐτάρκεια, it seems to have been a favourite Stoic word: see the note on ver. 11. As in ἀπολαμβάνειν (see Gal. iv. 5), the idea of ἀπό in this compound is correspondence i.e. of the contents to the capacity, of the possession to the desire, etc., so that it denotes the full complement. The following word περισσεύω expresses an advance on ἀπέχω; 'not only full, but overflowing.'

²⁰ τῷ δὲ Θεῷ καὶ πατρὶ ἡμῶν ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων, ἀμήν.

²¹ Ἀσπάσασθε πάντα ἅγιον ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. ἀσπάζονται ὑμᾶς οἱ σὺν ἐμοὶ ἀδελφοί. ²² ἀσπάζονται ὑμᾶς πάντες οἱ ἅγιοι, μάλιστα δὲ οἱ ἐκ τῆς Καίσαρος οἰκίας.

²³ Ἡ χάρις τοῦ κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μετὰ τοῦ πνεύματος ὑμῶν. [ἀμήν.]

παρὰ Ἐπαφροδίτου κ.τ.λ.] ‘at the hands of Epaphroditus the gifts transmitted from you.’ On the preposition παρὰ see the note Gal. i. 12.

ὁσμὴν εὐωδίας] a very frequent expression in the LXX for the smell of sacrifices and offerings, being a rendering of חַיִּיט (e.g. Gen. viii. 21, Exod. xxix. 18, etc.). St Paul employs it as a metaphor likewise in Ephes. v. 2; comp. 2 Cor. ii. 15, 16. So too Test. vii. Patr. Levi 3 προσφέρουσι κυρίῳ ὁσμὴν εὐωδίας λογικὴν καὶ θυσίαν ἀναίμακτον.

θυσίαν δεκτὴν κ.τ.λ.] So Rom. xii. 1 παραστήσαι τὰ σώματα ὑμῶν θυσίαν ζώσαν ἁγίαν εὐάρεστον τῷ Θεῷ κ.τ.λ. comp. 1 Pet. ii. 5, Heb. xiii. 16. The expression εὐάρεστος τῷ Θεῷ occurs Wisd. iv. 10 (comp. Clem. Rom. 49, Ign. Smyrn. 8), and εὐαρεστεῖν τῷ Θεῷ is common in the LXX.

19. ὁ Θεός μου] ‘my God’: comp. i. 3. The pronoun is especially expressive here: ‘You have supplied all my wants (vv. 16, 18), God on my behalf shall supply all yours.’

ἐν δόξῃ] These words show that the needs here contemplated are not merely temporary. Πληρώσει ἐν δόξῃ seems to be a pregnant phrase, signifying ‘shall supply by placing you in glory’; comp. ver. 16 ἐν Θεσσαλονίκῃ. This is still further explained by ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, ‘through your union with, incorporation in, Christ Jesus.’

20. ἡ δόξα. See the notes Gal. i. 5. ἡμῶν] It is no longer μου, for the reference is not now to himself as distinguished from the Philippians, but as united with them.

21. ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ] probably to be taken with ἀσπάσασθε; comp. Rom. xvi. 22, 1 Cor. xvi. 19.

οἱ σὺν ἐμοὶ ἀδελφοί] Apparently the Apostle’s personal companions and fellow-travellers are meant, as distinguished from the Christians residing in Rome who are described in the following verse; see the note on Gal. i. 2. On St Paul’s companions during or about this time see the introduction p. 11.

22. πάντες οἱ ἅγιοι] All the Christians in Rome, not his personal attendants only.

οἱ ἐκ τῆς Καίσαρος οἰκίας] ‘The members of Cæsar’s household,’ probably slaves and freedmen attached to the palace: see the detached note p. 169, and the introduction pp. 14, 19. The expression οἰκία Καίσαρος corresponds to ‘familia’ or ‘domus Cæsaris’ (Tac. Hist. ii. 92) and might include equally the highest functionaries and the lowest menials. Compare Philo Flacc. p. 522 μ εἰ δὴ μὴ βασιλεὺς ᾗν ἀλλὰ τις τῶν ἐκ τῆς Καίσαρος οἰκίας, οὐκ ᾧφειλε προνομίαν τινα καὶ τιμὴν ἔχειν; Hippol. Hær. ix. 12 οἰκέτης ἐτύγγχανε Καρποφόρου τινὸς ἀνδρὸς πιστοῦ ὄντος ἐκ τῆς Καίσαρος οἰκίας.

‘Clement my fellow-labourer.’

Identical with Clement of
Rome?

WE have seen the Christians of Philippi honourably associated with two Apostolic Fathers, Ignatius and Polycarp¹. But were they even more intimately connected with the third name of the triad? Is there sufficient ground for identifying Clement St Paul’s fellow-labourer, saluted in this Epistle, with Clement the writer of the letter to the Corinthians, the early bishop of Rome, the central figure in the Church of the succeeding generation?

Authorities for the identification.

Of the Roman bishop Irenæus says, that he ‘had seen the blessed Apostles and conversed with them and had the preaching of the Apostles still ringing in his ears and their tradition before his eyes’². From his silence about St Paul it may perhaps be inferred that he did not see any direct mention of the Roman Clement in the epistles of this Apostle. Origen however very distinctly identifies the author of the Corinthian letter with the person saluted in the Epistle to the Philippians³. And, starting from Origen, this view was transmitted through Eusebius to later writers⁴. Nor does the supposition do any violence to character. The epistle of the Roman Clement was written to heal a feud in a distant but friendly Church: and in like manner St Paul’s fellow-labourer is here invoked to aid in a work of reconciliation.

Difficulties of place

and date.

Nevertheless the notices of place and time are opposed to the identification of the two. For (1) the author of the letter to Corinth was a leading member of the Roman Church, while St Paul’s fellow-labourer seems clearly to be represented as resident at Philippi. And again (2) the date interposes a serious though not insuperable difficulty. Historical evidence⁵ and internal probability⁶ alike point to the later years of Domitian (about A.D. 96), as the time when the Epistle of Clement was written. If Eusebius is correct, the author died soon after, in the third year of Trajan, A.D. 100⁷. But in the list of the early bishops of Rome, where even the order is uncertain, the dates may fairly be considered conjectural or capricious; and there is some ground for supposing that he may have lived even longer than this. If the received chronology be only approximately true, the Shepherd of Hermas can hardly have been written much earlier than A.D. 140⁸. Yet the author there represents

¹ See the introduction, p. 61 sq.

² Iren. iii. 3-3.

³ In Joann. i. 29 (iv. p. 153, Delarue).

⁴ Euseb. H.E. iii. 4, 15, Epiphani. Hær. xxvii. 6 (where however by a slip of memory the Epistle to the Romans is mentioned), Hieron. Vir. Ill. 15, adv. Jovin. i. 11; comp. Apost. Const. vi. 8.

⁵ Hegesippus in Euseb. H.E. iii. 16; comp. iv. 22.

⁶ See St Clement of Rome p. 4, with the references.

⁷ Euseb. H.E. iii. 34. The date in the Chronicon of the same writer is A.D. 95.

⁸ The statements in the text are founded on two data; (1) The assertion in the Muratorian Fragment (West-himself as commissioned by the angel to deliver the book to Clement¹. It is true we may place the imaginary date of the vision many years before the actual writing and publication of the Shepherd: yet even then the difficulty does not altogether vanish; for the author describes himself as a married man with a family of children grown or growing up² at the time when Clement is living. On these grounds it would appear that we cannot well place the death of Clement earlier than A.D. 110, i.e. nearly 50 years after the date of the Epistle to the Philippians. And it is not likely, though far from impossible, that St Paul's fellow-labourer should still be living and active after the lapse of half a century.

Another objection also has been urged against the identity. Early Connexion tradition almost uniformly represents St Clement of Rome as a disciple not of St Paul but of St Peter³. On this however I cannot lay any stress. The tradition may be traced to the influence of the Clementine Homilies and Recognitions: and it belongs to the general plan of these Judaic writings to transfer to St Peter, as the true Apostle of the Gentiles, the companionships and achievements of St Paul⁴. On the other hand St Clement's letter itself, though it shows a knowledge of the First Epistle of St Peter, bears yet stronger traces of St Paul's influence. It is at least possible that St Clement knew both Apostles, as he quotes the writings of both and mentions both by name⁵.

All these difficulties however might be set aside, if Clement were a Clement a rare name. But this is far from being the case. Lipsius enumerates common a five Clements mentioned by Tacitus alone⁶: and extant inscriptions would name. supply still more convincing proofs of its frequency. Though common enough before, its popularity was doubtless much increased under the Flavian dynasty, when it was borne by members of the reigning house.

A strange destiny has pursued the name of Clement of Rome. The Recent romance of story, which gathered about it in the earliest ages of the criticism. Church, has been even surpassed by the romance of criticism of which cott Canon p. 480, 2nd ed.), 'Pastorem vero nuperime temporibus nostris in urbe Roma Hermas conscripsit, sedente cathedra urbis Romæ ecclesiæ Pio episcopo fratre ejus'; (2) The received date of the episcopate of Pius (A.D. 142—157, Euseb. H.E. iii. 15, 34; A.D. 138—152, Euseb. Chron.). But on the other hand it must be said (1) That as the Muratorian Fragment is obviously a translation from the Greek, we cannot feel any certainty that the original stated the book to have been written during the episcopate of Pius, though the Latin sedente seems to imply this; and (2) That no confidence can be placed in the dates of the early Roman bishops; for while Eusebius himself has two different lists, the catalogues of other writers differ from both. Hermas may have written before his brother's episcopate, or Pius may have become bishop at an earlier date than Eusebius supposes. If either or both these suppositions be true, the interval between the death of Clement and the writing of the Shepherd may be considerably diminished, and the chronological difficulty which I have suggested in the text vanishes.

¹ Hermas Vis. ii. 4.

² Vis. i. 3, ii. 3.

³ See especially Tertull. Præscr. Hær. 32, Origen Philoc. 22: and consult Lipsius de Clem. Rom. p. 172 sq.

⁴ See Galatians p. 315 sq.

⁵ Clem. Rom. § 5. See Galatians, pp. 323, 341.

⁶ Lipsius, p. 168.

Baur's
theory.

it has been the subject in these latest days. Its occurrence in the Epistle to the Philippians has been made the signal for an attack on the genuineness of this letter. The theory of Baur¹ is as follows. The conversion of Flavius Clemens, the kinsman of Domitian, is the sole foundation in fact, upon which the story of Clement the Roman bishop has been built². The writer of the Clementine Homilies, an adherent of the Petrine or Jewish party in the Church, bent on doing honour to his favourite Apostle, represents Clement as the disciple or successor of St Peter. In order to do this, he is obliged to throw the date of Clement farther back and thus to represent him as the kinsman not of Domitian, but of Tiberius. The forger of the Philippian Epistle writes at a later date when this fiction has been generally received as an accredited fact. Though himself a Pauline Christian, he is anxious to conciliate the Petrine faction and for this purpose represents this imaginary but now all-famous disciple of St Peter, as a fellow-labourer of St Paul. The whole epistle in fact is written up to this mention of Clement. The prætorium, the household of Caesar, are both introduced to give an air of probability to the notice. In this criticism, unsubstantial as it is, one element of truth may be recognised. The Roman Clement, as he appears in his extant letter and as he may be discerned through the dim traditions of antiquity, is a man of large sympathies and comprehensive views, if not a successful reconciler, at all events a fit mediator between the extreme parties in the Church. The theory itself it will not be necessary to discuss seriously. The enormous difficulties which it involves will be apparent at once. But it may be worth while to call attention to the hollow basis on which it rests. Baur omits to notice that the Clement here mentioned appears as resident at Philippi and not at Rome: though on this point the supposed forger would have been scrupulously exact, as supplying the key to his whole mean-

Schwegler. ing. To these speculations Schwegler³, following up a hint thrown out by Baur, adds his own contribution. Euodia and Syntyche, he maintains, are not two women but two parties in the Church, the 'true yoke-fellow' being none other than St Peter himself. Were they the names of historical persons, he writes, it would give the passage 'an extremely strange character.' It may be inferred from this that he considers his own interpretation entirely simple and natural. Schwegler however stops short of explaining why the one party is called Euodia and the other Syntyche. It is left to a later and bolder critic to supply the deficiency.

Volkmar. Volkmar⁴ finds the solution in the Apostolic Constitutions, where it is stated that Euodius was made bishop of Antioch by St Peter and Ignatius by St Paul⁵. As Euodius is the Petrine bishop, so Euodia will represent the Petrine party. The names, he supposes, are adopted with a view to their significance. Euodia, 'taking the right path,' is a synonyme for orthodoxy, and therefore aptly describes the Jewish community: while Syntyche,

¹ Paulus, p. 469 sq.

² See above, p. 22.

³ Nachapost. Zeit. II. p. 135.

⁴ Theolog. Jahrb. xv. p. 311 sq. (1856), xvi. p. 147 sq. (1857). Graetz answers Volkmar by claiming Flavius

Clemens as a proselyte to Judaism. His own speculations are equally extravagant: Gesch. der Juden iv. p. 435 (ed. 2), Monatschr. f. Gesch. u. Wiss. d. Judenth. April 1869, p. 169.

⁵ Apost. Const. vii. 46.

'the partner (consors),' is an equally fit designation of the later associated Gentile Church¹. This last story completes the building thus piled by three successive hands. Meanwhile it will be obvious to all, that a writer could not more effectually have concealed his meaning and thereby frustrated his own designs, than by wearing the impenetrable veil of enigma thus ascribed to him. But indeed it is needless to waste time on this learned trifling, which might be overlooked if the interests indirectly involved were less serious. In dealing with such theories the bare statement is often the best refutation².

Cæsar's Household.

THE mention of certain members of Cæsar's household at the close of the Philippian Epistle has given rise to much speculation and formed the groundwork of more than one capricious theory. It has been assumed that this phrase must designate persons of high rank and position, powerful minions of the court, great officers of state, or even blood relations of the emperor himself. On this assumption, maintained in a more or less exaggerated form, it has been inferred that some time must have elapsed between St Paul's arrival at Rome and the date of this epistle, to account for this unwonted triumph of the Gospel. And extreme critics have even taken the expression as the starting-point for an attack on the genuineness of the letter, charging the writer with an anachronism and supposing him to refer to Clemens and Domitilla, the kinsman and kinswoman of Domitian, who suffered for the faith at the close of the century³.

All such inferences are built on a misconception of the meaning of the term. The 'domus' or 'familia Cæsaris' (represented by the Greek οἰκία ^{the house-} Kaίρας) includes the whole of the imperial household, the meanest slaves as well as the most powerful courtiers. On the character and constitution of this household we happen to possess more information than perhaps on any other department of social life in Rome. The inscriptions relating thereto are so numerous, that a separate section is assigned to them in all good collections. And almost every year is adding to these stores of information by fresh discoveries. In Rome itself, if we may judge by these inscriptions, the 'domus Augusta' must have formed no inconsiderable fraction of the whole population; but it comprised besides all persons in the emperor's service, whether slaves or freemen, in Italy and even in the provinces.

The monuments to which I have referred are chiefly sepulchral. Co-lumbaria have been discovered from time to time, whose occupants be- Sources of information.

¹ When I wrote the above, I should not have thought it possible to outbid in extravagance the speculations mentioned in the text; but Hitzig, Zur Kritik Paulinischer Briefe p. 7 sq. (1870), far exceeds them all. The refutation of Hilgenfeld, Zeitschr. 1871, p. 331 sq., was quite unnecessary.

² Other recent speculations relating to the history of the Roman Clement, more innocent but equally unsubstantial, will be found in Lagarde's introduction to his Clementina, p. (12) sq. (1865).

³ See above, pp. 22, 168.

longed principally, if not solely, to this class. In 1726 one of these places of sepulture was exhumed on the Appian way. Its contents will appear from the title of a work published the following year, and giving an account of the discovery: Monumentum sive Columbarium Libertorum et Servorum Liviæ Augustæ et Cæsarum, etc. ab A. F. Gorio. More recent excavations have added to our knowledge on this subject. Since the year 1840 several other sepulchral dove-cotes, situated also near the Appian way, have been brought to light. Accounts of these, more or less complete, with copies of inscriptions will be found in Canina's Prima Parte della Via Appia i. p. 217 sq., in the Dissertazioni della Pontificia Accademia Romana di Archeologia xi. p. 317 sq. (1852), and in the Monumenti ed Annali pubblicati dall' Istituto di Corrispondenza Archeologica nel 1856 (a paper by Henzen). The occupants of these recently excavated columbaria again are almost all freedmen or slaves of the emperors. The frequency of the name Ti. Claudius suggests a date not earlier and not much later than the second and fourth Cæsars: and this date is confirmed by the mention of other members of the imperial family at this time, as Messalina, Octavia, Agrippina, Drusus, etc. Though here and there a name points to a later emperor, the great majority must be assigned to the reign of Nero or his immediate predecessors and successors, and thus the persons to whom they refer were mostly contemporaries of St Paul. Besides these special sources of information, a vast number of isolated inscriptions relating to the servants and dependents of the emperors have been discovered from time to time, and will be found in the general collections of Muratori, Gruter, Orelli, and others. By these means we obtain some insight into the names and offices of the 'household of Cæsar' at the date when the expression was used in the Epistle to the Philippians.

List of offices in the household.

The following list will give some idea of the number and variety of places which the 'domus Augusta' included: 'pædagogus puerorum, dispensator rationis private, exactor tributorum, prepositus velariorum, procurator prægustatorum, præpositus auri escarii, procurator balnei, villicus hortorum, etc.; a lapidicinis, a pendice cedri, a frumentis, a commentariis equorum, a veste regia, a cura catellæ, ab argento potorio, a suppellectile castrensi, a veste forensi, a libellis, a studiis, ab epistulis, a rationibus, a bibliotheca Latina Apollinis, a bibliotheca Græca Palatina, etc.; architectus, tabellarius, castellarius, chirurgus, ocularius, diætarchus, nomenclator, tesserarius, designator, vicarius, symphonicus, musicarius, pedissequus, lecticarius, cocus, argentarius, sutor, cubicularius, triclinarius, ostiarius, ornator, unctor, etc.; tonstrix, sarcinatrix, obstetrix, etc.' This very imperfect list suggests a minute subdivision of offices. When we find several distinct functions in the single department of the wardrobe or the plate-chest, when even the 'tasters' form a separate class of servants under their own chief, the multitude and multiplicity thus exhibited forbid us to speculate on the exact office or rank which may have been held by these friends of St Paul. Least of all are we encouraged to assume that they were persons of great influence or distinguished rank. At the same time the connexion with Cæsar's household doubtless secured even to the lowest grades of slaves and freedmen substantial though undefined privileges and immunities, and conferred on them a certain social importance among their equals,

Bearing on the reference in
St Paul.

which made them value their position¹. Hence we may account for the scrupulous care with which an office in the household, however mean, is always recorded on monumental inscriptions. At the time when St Paul wrote the influence of the emperor's slaves and dependents had about reached its climax. The reigns of Claudius and Nero have been described as the saturnalia of the imperial freedmen².

Now, if I am right in supposing that the Epistle to the Philippians was written soon after St Paul's arrival in the metropolis, it would seem to follow that the members of Cæsar's household who sent their salutations to Philippi were earlier converts, who did not therefore owe their knowledge of the Gospel to St Paul's preaching in Rome³. Under any circumstances this supposition best explains the incidental character of the allusion. For St Paul obviously assumes that his distant correspondents know all about the persons thus referred to. If so, we are led to look for them in the long list of names saluted by St Paul some three years before in the Epistle to the Romans.

Nor is there any prior improbability in this supposition. The earliest converts in Rome would naturally be drawn from the classes of foreigners sojourning or permanently resident there⁴, Greeks, Syrians, and especially Jews. Accordingly one of the persons thus saluted is described as a 'first-fruit of Asia⁵'. Aquila and Priscilla also, who are mentioned in this list, appear residing at one time at Corinth, at another at Ephesus⁶. Of several others again St Paul speaks as personal acquaintances, though he had not as yet visited Rome. Of these Mary bears a Jewish name⁷, and others besides plainly belonged to the same race⁸, though their names do not directly proclaim their origin. Now, though Greeks and Orientals formed a numerous and active portion of the general population of Rome, it was especially about the palace and the court that their numbers and influence were felt⁹. History reveals not Greeks only, of whom the Romans were a little less intolerant, but Syrians, Samaritans, Philistines¹⁰, and Jews, and found about the court.

¹ Plin. N.H. xiii. 5 'Marcelli Æser-nini libertus sed qui se potentia causa Cæsaris libertis adoptasset,' Hist. Aug. Pertinax 8 'Reddidit præterea domi-nis eos qui se ex privatis domibus in aulam contulerant.'

² See Friedländer Sittengeschichte Roms i. pp. 65, 68 (ed. 2). In the 2nd chapter of this work much important information respecting the court of the early Cæsars is collected and arranged. The references in the last note are taken thence (p. 62).

³ See above, pp. 19, 32.

⁴ Seneca (adv. Helv. Cons. 6) says of the population of Rome at this time, 'Jube istos omnes ad nomen citari et unde domo quisque sit quære: videbis majorem partem esse quærelictis sedibus suis venerit in maximam quidem et pulcherrimam urbem, non tamen suam.'

⁵ Rom. xvi. 5 (the correct reading).

⁶ Acts xviii. 2, 18, 26, 1 Cor. xvi. 19.

⁷ Rom. xvi. 6. Probably Jewish, though not certainly, for the form is indecisive. The best mss read Ma-plav (not Μαρίαν), and 'Maria' is a good Latin name also.

⁸ xvi. 7, 10, those whom St Paul calls his 'kinsmen' (comp. ix. 3).

⁹ See above, p. 14, and comp. especially Friedländer i. p. 60 sq.

¹⁰ Thallus a Samaritan under Tiberius (Joseph. Ant. xviii. 6. 4), and Apelles an Ascalonite under Caius (see below, p. 172), will serve as examples of these two minor races. Syrians and Jews very commonly rose to power at court. The case of the Jewish actor Aliturus mentioned above (p. 6) illustrates the influence of this latter people.

holding places of influence about the emperors at this time. And, for every one who succeeded in attaining to distinction, there must have been tens and hundreds of Orientals about the court who never emerged from obscurity. For, independently of other causes, the success of the few would draw around them crowds of their fellow-countrymen. Thus the household of the Cæsars would supply in the greatest abundance the material from which the conversions mentioned in the Epistle to the Romans would probably be wrought.

Following this clue, it may be useful to consult the inscriptions with a view to ascertaining whether the information thence derived throws any additional light on the subject. And for this purpose I shall take in order those names in the salutations of the Epistle to the Romans which give promise of yielding a result.

Amplias. 1. AMPLIAS is a contraction of Ampliatius, which is read in some of the best copies. A common name in itself, it occurs several times in connexion with the imperial household. Thus AMPLIATUS . HILARI . AUGUSTOR . LIBERTI . SER . VILICUS (Grut. p. 62. 10). We meet with it also attached to the names 'Ti. Claudius' (Murat. p. 1249. 14, comp. p. 1150. 7). Again two persons bearing the name are mentioned in the inscriptions of columbaria specially appropriated to the household (Acc. di Arch. xi. pp. 359, 374). At a later date we read of one Ampliatius, a freedman of Hadrian (Grut. p. 591. 10).

Urbanus. 2. The name URBANUS is equally common with Ampliatius, and in the following inscriptions designates members of the household: TI . CLAUDI . URBANI . SER . MENSORIS . AEDIFICIORUM (Murat. p. 924. 8); CLAUDIAE . PHILETI . AUG . L . LIBERTAE . HEURESII . URBANUS . ET . SURUS . FRATRES . SORORI . PISSIMAE (Murat. p. 996. 5); URBANUS . LYDES . AUG . L . DISPENS . INMUNIS . DAT . HERMAE . FRATRI . etc. (Murat. 920. 1). T . FLAVIUS . AUG . LIB . URBANUS (Grut. p. 589. 10). Accordingly the name C. Julius Urbanus is found more than once (Grut. p. 574. 1, p. 981. 3). On an inscription A.D. 115, Urbanus and Ampliatius occur next to each other in a list of imperial freedmen connected with the mint (Grut. p. 1070. 1).

Stachys. 3. The next name STACHYS is comparatively rare. Yet at least one person so called held an important office in the household near the time when St Paul wrote: STACHYS . MARCELLAE . MEDICUS, whose name occurs on the same monument with one TI . JULIUS . FIDES (Henzen in the Instit. di Corrisp. Archeol. 1856, p. 15, no. 44). Again in another inscription, where one Stachys is mentioned, and where the names of his relations, Julius, Julia, Claudia, are also given, we may safely infer some connexion with the court (Grut. p. 689. 1). Compare also Grut. p. 587. 2.

Apelles. 4. APELLES again is a name belonging to the imperial household. It was borne for instance by a famous tragic actor, a native of Ascalon, who at one time stood high in the favour of the emperor Caius, and is described as inheriting a national antipathy to the Jews (Philo Leg. ad Cai. p. 576 M; see Friedländer Sittengesch. Roms i. p. 98). One CL. APELLES again is mentioned as a member of the household (Orell. 2892) and the name TI. CLAUDIUS APELLA occurs in an inscription of the age of Vespasian (Grut. p. 240).

Household of Aristobulus. 5. ARISTOBULUS surnamed the younger, a grandson of Herod the Great, was educated in the metropolis, together with his brothers Agrippa and Herod. While his two brothers became kings, the one of Judæa, the other of Chalcis, Aristobulus himself ended his days in a private station, and as it appears, in Rome (Joseph. Bell. Jud. ii. 11. 6). The date of his death is uncertain, but he was still living in the year 45 (Antiq. xx. 1. 2). The emperor Claudius, writing at this time, speaks of Aristobulus as entertaining most dutiful and friendly sentiments towards himself. When the slaves of a household passed into the hands of a new master, by cession or inheritance or confiscation, they continued to be designated by the name of their former proprietor. Thus a slave whom the emperor had inherited by the will of the Galatian king Amyntas is described as CAESARIS. SER. AMYNTIANUS (Grut. p. 577. 5). In the same way in the imperial household we meet with Mæcenatiani, Agrippiani, Germaniciani, etc., where in like manner the names preserve the memory of their earlier masters. Now it seems not improbable, considering the intimate relations between Claudius and Aristobulus, that at the death of the latter his servants, wholly or in part, should be transferred to the palace. In this case they would be designated Aristobuliani, for which I suppose St Paul's οἱ ἐκ τῶν Ἀριστοβούλου to be an equivalent. It is at least not an obvious phrase and demands explanation. And, as the household of Aristobulus would naturally be composed in a large measure of Jews, the Gospel would the more easily be introduced to their notice. Moreover it is worth observing that after saluting 'them of the household of Aristobulus,' St Paul immediately singles out one whom he designates his kinsman, i. e. his fellow-countryman¹, and whose name HERODION we might expect to find among the slaves or freedmen of a distinguished member of the Herodian family. This interpretation of the expression τοὺς ἐκ τῶν Ἀριστοβούλου will, I think, be confirmed by the salutation which follows.

6. For immediately after St Paul uses the same form of expression in speaking of the household of NARCISSUS. The name Narcissus indeed is common enough, and we meet with it several times where a connexion with the household seems probable, e.g. Ti. Claudius Narcissus (Murat. p. 1325. 5, comp. p. 1452. 8), Ti. Julius Narcissus (Murat. p. 1362. 2, 4). But here, as in the case of Aristobulus, the expression seems to point to some famous person of the name. And the powerful freedman Narcissus, whose wealth was proverbial (Juv. Sat. xiv. 329), whose influence with Claudius was unbounded, and who bore a chief part in the intrigues of this reign, alone satisfies this condition. He was put to death by Agrippina shortly after the accession of Nero (Tac. Ann. xiii. 1, Dion Cass. lx. 34), about three or four years before the Epistle to the Romans was written. As was usual in such cases, his household would most probably pass into the hands of the emperor, still however retaining the name of Narcissus. One member of this household apparently is commemorated in an extant inscription, TI. CLAUDIO. SP. F. NARCISSIANO (Murat. p. 1150. 4). These Narcissiani I suppose to be designated by St Paul's οἱ ἐκ τῶν Ναρκίσσου.

7. In TRYPHÆNA and TRYPHOSA we may recognise two sisters or at least near relatives, for it was usual to designate members of the same family by derivatives of the same root. The name Tryphæna, though not common, was found in the imperial household at or about the time when St Paul wrote. On an inscription in the columbaria chiefly appropriated to the emperor's servants we read, D. M. TRYPHAENAE. VALERIA. TRYPHAENAE. MATRI. B. M. F. ET. VALERIUS. FUTIANUS (Acc. di Archeol. xi. p. 375); where the direct connexion with the household is established by a neighbouring inscription, D. M. CLAUDIAE. AUG. LIB. NEREIDI. M. VALERIUS. FUTIANUS (sic). MATRI. CARISSIMAE (ib. p. 376). The names Valerius, Valeria, very frequently occur in connexion with Claudius, Claudia, the former having doubtless been introduced into the imperial household through the empress Messalina, a daughter of M. Valerius Messala¹. The combination of these two gentile names fixes the date approximately. Another Valeria Tryphæna, if it be not the same, is mentioned elsewhere; Q. VALERIO. SALUTARI. AUG. PUTEOLIS. ET. CUMIS. ET VALERIAE. TRIFENAE. HEREDES (Grut. p. 481. 2). The name of one Claudia Tryphæna also is preserved: CLAUDIA. TRYPHAENA. FECIT. ASIATICAE. FILIAE. SUAE (Murat. p. 1150. 3).

¹ See above, p. 16, note 2.

and Tryphosa.

The name Tryphosa also, which occurs more frequently, is found several times in connexion with the household: AGRIAE. TRYPHOSAE. VESTIFICAE. LIVIUS. THEONA. AB. EPISTULIS. GRAEC. SCRIBA. A. LIB. PONTIFICALIBUS. CONJUGI. SANCTISSIMAE. B.D.S.M. (Grut. p. 578. 6, comp. ib. p. 446. 6): DIS. MANIBUS. JULIAE. TRYPHOSAE. T. FLAVIUS. FORTUNATUS. CONJUGI etc. (Grut. p. 796. 3, comp. ib. p. 1133. 1). In another inscription again it is found connected with the name Valerius: VALERI. PRIMI. ET. JUN. TRYPHOSAE. VIVA. FEC. (Grut. p. 893. 2).

Rufus.

8. RUFUS is a very ordinary name, and would not have claimed notice here but for its occurrence in one of the Gospels. There seems no reason to doubt the tradition that St Mark wrote especially for the Romans; and, if so, it is worth remarking that he alone of the evangelists describes Simon of Cyrene, as 'the father of Alexander and Rufus' (xv. 21). A person of this name therefore seems to have held a prominent place among the Roman Christians; and thus there is at least fair ground for identifying the Rufus of St Paul with the Rufus of St Mark. The inscriptions exhibit several members of the household bearing the names Rufus and Alexander, but this fact is of no value where both names are so common.

Hermes.

9. Of the group which follows, HERMES is among the commonest slave-names. In the household alone probably not less than a score of persons might be counted up from the inscriptions, who bore this name at or about the time when St Paul wrote. HERMAS again, being a contraction of several different names, such as Hermagoras, Hermeros, Hermodorus, Hermogenes, etc., though not quite so common as the former, is still very frequent.

Hermas.

Patrobas.

The remaining three are rare. Yet PATROBAS, an abbreviated form of Patrobius, was borne by a wealthy and powerful freedman of Nero, who was put to death by Galba (Tac. Hist. i. 49, ii. 95). But though the infrequency of the name would suggest his identity with the person saluted by St Paul, his character accords ill with the profession of a disciple of viro (Orelli, 4492). This Octavia is the unhappy daughter of Claudius and Messalina, who was afterwards married to Nero. See also Clem. Rom. § 59 (note).

¹ This inscription will serve as an illustration; VALERIA. HILARIA. NUTRIX. OCTAVIAE. CAESARIS. AUGUSTI. REQUIESCIT. CUM. TI. CLAUDIO. FRUCTO.

Christ, unless history has done him a cruel wrong. The Patrobas of St Paul however might well have been a dependent of this powerful freedman. To some member of the household, possibly to this notorious Patrobius, the following inscription refers: TI. CL. AUG. L. PATROBIUS (Grut. p. 610. 3), where doubtless 'Patrobius' is correctly read for 'Patronus': comp. Murat. p. 1329. 3, TI. CLAUDIO. PATROBIO.

10. PHILOLOGUS and JULIA appear to have been man and wife, or brother and sister. The latter name points to a dependent of the court. The former also occurs more than once in connexion with the imperial household: C. JULIO. C. L. PHILOLOGO (Murat. p. 1526. 3); DAMA. LIVIAE. L. GAS. PROPERUS. PHILOLOGI Mon. Liv. p. 163; TI. CLAUDIUS. AUGUSTI. LIB. PHILOLOGUS. AR. EPISTOLIS (Murat. p. 2943. 2)¹; TI. CLAUDIUS. AUGUSTI. LIB. PHILOLOGUS. LIBERALIS (Grut. p. 630. 1).

11. Immediately after Philologus and Julia are mentioned NEREUS and his sister. For Nereus compare this inscription found at Ancyra; EUTYCHUS. NERII. CAESARIS. AUG. SER. VIL. FILIO (Murat. p. 299. 7). The sister's name is not given, but one Nereis was a member of the household about this time, as appears from an inscription already quoted (p. 173).

As the result of this investigation, we seem to have established a fair presumption, that among the salutations in the Epistle to the Romans some members at least of the imperial household are included. The inscriptions indeed cannot generally be taken to show more than the fact that the same names occurred there. A very faint probability of the identity of persons may in some instances be added, though even with the rarer names the identification must be held highly precarious. But a combination, such as Philologus and Julia, affords more solid ground for inference: and in other cases, as in the household of Narcissus, the probable circumstances suggest a connexion with the palace. If so, an explanation has been found of the reference to members of Caesar's household in the Philippian letter. At all events this investigation will not have been useless, if it has shown that the names and allusions at the close of the Roman Epistle are in keeping with the circumstances of the metropolis in St Paul's day; for thus it will have supplied an answer to two forms of objection; the one denying the genuineness of the last two chapters of this letter, and the other allowing their genuineness but detaching the salutations from the rest and assigning them to another epistle².

¹ It has been supposed that the name Philologus was given by the master to the freedman mentioned in this inscription, as being appropriate to his office; Friedländer, i. pp. 89, 160. The following inscription may be alleged in support of this conjecture; RUDEUS. M. LEPIDI. L. GRAMMATICUS. etc. ATTEIUS. PHILOGUS. DISCIPULUS (Grut. p. 653. 2). If so, some light is thrown on the probable occupation of the Philologus of St Paul.

² The doxology (Rom. xvi. 25, 26, 27) is found in some copies at the end of the 14th, in others at the end of the 16th chapter, and in others in both places, while others again omit it entirely. Moreover in Marcion's copy the last two chapters of the epistle were wanting. All these variations are easily explained by the hypothesis that the Epistle to the Romans was circulated at a very early date in two forms, the personal matter being omitted in the shorter. Baur however condemns the last two chapters as spurious (Paulus p. 398 sq.), though the mind of St Paul is apparent in almost every phrase. Other less extravagant critics have found difficulties in one or two historical notices which these chapters contain: and Ewald, whose opinion always deserves consideration, solves these difficulties by severing xvi. 3—20 from the rest, and treating it as a fragment of a lost Epistle to the Ephesians (Die Sendschreiben etc. p. 428). By this means he explains the reference to Epænetus as the first-fruit of Asia (ver. 5 where 'Aσίas, not 'Αχαΐας, is the right reading), and accounts also for the presence of Aquila and Priscilla (ver. 3), who were found not long before at Ephesus (1 Cor. xvi. 19). This view is far preferable to the former, inasmuch as it recognises St Paul's authorship; but on the other hand it loses all support from the phenomena of the mss, which require the two chapters to be treated as a whole, and lend no countenance to this arbitrary dissection. The novel theory recently started by Renan (Saint Paul p. lxxiii), who supposes that an editor has combined four copies of the same encyclical letter of St Paul, each addressed to a different church and having a different ending, has the same advantage over Baur's view, but is condemned by its own complexity. Nor in fact are the difficulties serious enough to justify any such treatment. At a time when the court and city of Rome swarmed with Asiatics (Friedländer i. p. 59 sq.), it is no surprise to encounter one Christian convert among the crowd. And again, as Rome was the head-quarters of Aquila and Priscilla, and they had been driven thence by an imperial edict (Acts xviii. 2), it is natural enough that they should have returned thither, as soon as it was convenient and safe to do so. The year which elapses between the two notices of this couple (1 Cor. xvi. 19; Rom. xvi. 3—5) allows ample time for them to transfer themselves from Ephesus to Rome, and for the Apostle to hear of their return to their old abode. The results of the investigation in the text (whatever other value it may have) seem sufficient to counterbalance any such difficulties, for it has been shown that the notices are in keeping with Rome, and the same degree of coincidence probably could not be established in the case of any other place. A fuller refutation of Renan will be found in the Journal of Philology, II. p. 264 sq. In this and a later article (ib. III. p. 193 sq.) I have suggested a theory to account for the documentary facts, more especially the varying position of the doxology.

DISSERTATIONS.

I.

THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY.

II.

ST PAUL AND SENECA.

I.

THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY.

THE kingdom of Christ, not being a kingdom of this world, is not limited by the restrictions which fetter other societies, political or religious. It is in the fullest sense free, comprehensive, universal. It displays this character, not only in the acceptance of all comers who seek admission, irrespective of race or caste or sex, but also in the instruction and treatment of those who are already its members. It has no sacred days or seasons, no special sanctuaries, because every time and every place alike are holy. Above all it has no sacerdotal system. It interposes no sacrificial tribe or class between God and man, by whose intervention alone God is reconciled and man forgiven. Each individual member holds personal communion with the Divine Head. To Him immediately he is responsible, and from Him directly he obtains pardon and draws strength.

It is most important that we should keep this ideal definitely in view, and I have therefore stated it as broadly as possible. Yet the broad statement, if allowed to stand alone, would suggest a false impression, or at least would convey only a half truth. It must be evident that no society of men could hold together without officers, without rules, without institutions of any kind; and the Church of Christ is not exempt from this universal law. The conception in short is strictly an ideal, which we must ever hold before our eyes, and which should inspire and interpret ecclesiastical polity, but which nevertheless cannot supersede the necessary wants of human society, and, if crudely and hastily applied, will lead only to signal failure. As appointed days and set places are indispensable to her efficiency,

Ideal of the Christian Church.

Necessary
qualification.

The idea and the realization.

so also the Church could not fulfil the purposes for which she exists, without rulers and teachers, without a ministry of reconciliation, in short, without an order of men who may in some sense be designated a priesthood. In this respect the ethics of Christianity present an analogy to the politics. Here also the ideal conception and the actual realization are incommensurate and in a manner contradictory. The Gospel is contrasted with the Law, as the spirit with the letter. Its ethical principle is not a code of positive ordinances, but conformity to a perfect exemplar, incorporation into a divine life. The distinction is most important and eminently fertile in practical results. Yet no man would dare to live without laying down more or less definite rules for his own guidance, without yielding obedience to law in some sense; and those who discard or attempt to discard all such aids are often farthest from the attainment of Christian perfection.

Special characteristic of Christianity.

This qualification is introduced here to deprecate any misunderstanding to which the opening statement, if left without compensation, would fairly be exposed. It will be time to enquire hereafter in what sense the Christian ministry may or may not be called a priesthood. But in attempting to investigate the historical development of this divine institution, no better starting-point suggested itself than the characteristic distinction of Christianity, as declared occasionally by the direct language but more frequently by the eloquent silence of the apostolic writings.

The Jewish priesthood.

For in this respect Christianity stands apart from all the older religions of the world. So far at least, the Mosaic dispensation did not differ from the religions of Egypt or Asia or Greece. Yet the sacerdotal system of the Old Testament possessed one important characteristic, which separated it from heathen priesthoods and which deserves especial notice. The priestly tribe held this peculiar relation to God only as the representatives of the whole nation. As delegates of the people, they offered sacrifice and made atonement. The whole community is regarded as 'a kingdom of priests,' 'a holy nation.' When the sons of Levi are set apart, their consecration is distinctly stated to be due under the divine guidance not to any inherent sanctity or to any caste privilege, but to an act of delegation on the part of the entire people. The Levites are, so to speak, ordained by the whole congregation. 'The children of Israel,' it is said, 'shall put their hands upon the Levites'.¹ The nation thus deputed to a single tribe the priestly functions which belong properly to itself as a whole.

The Christian idea therefore was the restitution of this immediate ^{Its relation} and direct relation with God, which was partly suspended but not ^{to the} abolished by the appointment of a sacerdotal tribe. The Levitical ^{Christian} priesthood, like the Mosaic law, had served its temporary purpose. The period of childhood had passed, and the Church of God was now arrived at mature age. The covenant people resumed their sacerdotal functions. But the privileges of the covenant were no longer confined to the limits of a single nation. Every member of the human family was potentially a member of the Church, and, as such, a priest of God.

The influence of this idea on the moral and spiritual growth of ^{Influence} the individual believer is too plain to require any comment; but ^{of the} its social effects may call for a passing remark. It will hardly ^{Christian} be denied, I think, by those who have studied the history of modern civilization with attention, that this conception of the Christian Church has been mainly instrumental in the emancipation of the degraded and oppressed, in the removal of artificial barriers between class and class, and in the diffusion of a general philanthropy untrammelled by the fetters of party or race; in short, that to it mainly must be attributed the most important advantages which constitute the superiority of modern societies over ancient. Consciously or unconsciously, the idea of an universal priesthood, of the religious equality of all men, which, though not untaught before, was first embodied in the Church of Christ, has worked and is working untold blessings in political institutions and in social life. But the careful student will also observe that this idea has hitherto been very imperfectly apprehended; that throughout the history of the Church it has been struggling for recognition, at most times discerned in some of its aspects but at all times wholly ignored in others; and that therefore the actual results are a very inadequate measure of its efficacy, if only it could assume due prominence and were allowed free scope in action.

This then is the Christian ideal; a holy season extending the whole year round—a temple confined only by the limits of the habitable world—a priesthood coextensive with the human race.

¹ Num. viii. 10.

Practical
organization.

Strict loyalty to this conception was not held incompatible with practical measures of organization. As the Church grew in numbers, as new and heterogeneous elements were added, as the early fervour of devotion cooled and strange forms of disorder sprang up, it became necessary to provide for the emergency by fixed rules and definite officers. The community of goods, by which the infant Church had attempted to give effect to the idea of an universal brotherhood, must very soon have been abandoned under the pres-

Fixed days and places of worship;

sure of circumstances. The celebration of the first day in the week at once, the institution of annual festivals afterwards, were seen to be necessary to stimulate and direct the devotion of the believers. The appointment of definite places of meeting in the earliest days, the erection of special buildings for worship at a later date, were found indispensable to the working of the Church. But the Apostles never lost sight of the idea in their teaching. They proclaimed loudly that 'God dwelleth not in temples made by hands.' They indignantly denounced those who 'observed days and months and seasons and years.' This language is not satisfied by supposing that they condemned only the temple-worship in the one case, that they reprobated only Jewish sabbaths and new moons in the other. It was against the false principle that they waged war; the principle which exalted the means into an end, and gave an absolute intrinsic value to subordinate aids and expedients. These aids and expedients, for his own sake and for the good of the society to which he belonged, a Christian could not afford to hold lightly or neglect. But they were no part of the essence of God's message to man in the Gospel: they must not be allowed to obscure the idea of Christian worship.

but the idea kept in view.

Appointment of a ministry.

So it was also with the Christian priesthood. For communicating instruction and for preserving public order, for conducting religious worship and for dispensing social charities, it became necessary to appoint special officers. But the priestly functions and privileges of the Christian people are never regarded as transferred or even delegated to these officers. They are called stewards or messengers of God, servants or ministers of the Church, and the like: but the sacerdotal title is never once conferred upon them. The only priests under the Gospel, designated as such in the New Testament, are the saints, the members of the Christian brotherhood¹.

As individuals, all Christians are priests alike. As members of a corporation, they have their several and distinct offices. The similitude of the human body, where each limb or organ performs its own functions, and the health and growth of the whole frame are promoted by the harmonious but separate working of every part, was chosen by St Paul to represent the progress and operation of the Church. In two passages, written at two different stages in his apostolic career, he briefly sums up the offices in the Church with reference to this image. In the earlier² he enumerates 'first apostles, secondly prophets, thirdly teachers, then powers, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, kinds of tongues.' In the second passage³ the list is briefer; 'some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers.' The earlier enumeration differs chiefly from the later in specifying distinctly certain miraculous powers, this being required by the Apostle's argument which is directed against an exaggerated estimate and abuse of such gifts. Neither list can have been intended to be exhaustive. In both alike the work of converting unbelievers and founding congregations holds the foremost place, while the permanent government and instruction of the several churches is kept in the background. This prominence was necessary in the earliest age of the Gospel. The apostles, prophets, evangelists, all range under the former head. But the permanent ministry, though lightly touched upon, is not forgotten; for under the designation of 'teachers, helps, governments' in the one passage, of 'pastors and teachers' in the other, these officers must be intended. Again in both passages alike it will be seen that great stress is laid on the work of the Spirit. The faculty of governing not less than the utterance of prophecy, the gift of healing not less than the gift of tongues, is an inspiration of the Holy

Two passages in St Paul relating thereto.

They refer chiefly to the temporary ministry.

¹ 1 Pet. ii. 5, 9, Apoc. i. 6, v. 10, xx. 6. The commentator Hilary has expressed this truth with much distinctness: 'In lege nascebantur sacerdotes ex genere Aaron Levitæ: nunc autem omnes ex genere sunt sacerdotali, dicente Petro Apostolo, Quia estis genus regale et sacerdotalis etc.' (Ambrosiast. on Ephes. iv. 12.) The whole passage, to which I shall have occasion to refer again, contains a singularly appreciative account of the relation of the ministry to the congregation.

² 1 Cor. xii. 28.

³ Ephes. iv. 11.

Ghost. But on the other hand in both alike there is an entire silence about priestly functions: for the most exalted office in the Church, the highest gift of the Spirit, conveyed no sacerdotal right which was not enjoyed by the humblest member of the Christian community.

Growing importance of the permanent ministry.

From the subordinate place, which it thus occupies in the notices of St Paul, the permanent ministry gradually emerged, as the Church assumed a more settled form, and the higher but temporary offices, such as the apostolate, fell away. This progressive growth and development of the ministry, until it arrived at its mature and normal state, it will be the object of the following pages to trace.

Definition of terms necessary.

But before proceeding further, some definition of terms is necessary. On no subject has more serious error arisen from the confusion of language. The word 'priest' has two different senses. In the one it is a synonyme for presbyter or elder, and designates the minister who presides over and instructs a Christian congregation: in the other it is equivalent to the Latin sacerdos, the Greek ἱερεύς, or the Hebrew כהן, the offerer of sacrifices, who also performs other mediatorial offices between God and man. How the confusion between these two meanings has affected the history and theology of the Church, it will be instructive to consider in the sequel. At present it is sufficient to say that the word will be used throughout this essay, as it has been used hitherto, in the latter sense only, so that priestly will be equivalent to 'sacerdotal' or 'hieratic.' Etymologically indeed the other meaning is alone correct (for the words priest and presbyter are the same); but convenience will justify its restriction to this secondary and imported sense, since the English language supplies no other rendering of sacerdos or ἱερεύς. On the other hand, when the Christian elder is meant, the longer form 'presbyter' will be employed throughout.

'Priest' and 'presbyter.'

Different views on the origin of the threefold ministry.

History seems to show decisively that before the middle of the second century each church or organized Christian community had its three orders of ministers, its bishop, its presbyters, and its deacons. On this point there cannot reasonably be two opinions. But at what time and under what circumstances this organization was matured, and to what extent our allegiance is due to it as an authoritative ordinance, are more difficult questions. Some have recognised in episcopacy an institution of divine origin, absolute and indispensable; others have represented it as destitute of all apostolic sanction and authority. Some again have sought for the archetype of the threefold ministry in the Aaronic priesthood; others in the arrangements of synagogue worship. In this clamour of antagonistic opinions history is obviously the sole upright, impartial referee; and the historical mode of treatment will therefore be strictly adhered to in the following investigation. The doctrine in this instance at all events is involved in the history¹.

St Luke's narrative represents the Twelve Apostles in the earliest days as the sole directors and administrators of the Church. For the financial business of the infant community, not less than for its spiritual guidance, they alone are responsible. This state of things could not last long. By the rapid accession of numbers, and still more by the admission of heterogeneous classes into the Church, the work became too vast and too various for them to discharge unaided. To relieve them from the increasing pressure, the inferior and less important functions passed successively into other hands: and thus each grade of the ministry, beginning from the lowest, was created in order.

1. The establishment of the diaconate came first. Complaints had reached the ears of the Apostles from an outlying portion of the community. The Hellenist widows had been overlooked in the daily distribution of food and alms. To remedy this neglect a new office was created. Seven men were appointed whose duty it was to superintend the public messes², and, as we may suppose, to provide in other ways for the bodily wants of the helpless poor. Thus relieved, the Twelve were enabled to devote themselves without interruption 'to prayer and to the ministry of the word.' The Apostles suggested the creation of this new office, but the persons were chosen by popular election and afterwards ordained by the Twelve with imposition of hands. Though the complaint came from the Hellenists, it must not be supposed that the ministrations of the appointed to relieve the Apostles.

Ministry

1. DEACONS.
Appointment of the Seven.

¹ The origin of the Christian ministry is ably investigated in Rothe's Anfänge der Christlichen Kirche etc. (1837), and Ritschl's Entstehung der Altkatholischen Kirche (2nd ed. 1857). These are the most important of the more recent works on the subject with which I am acquainted, and to both of them I wish to acknowledge my obligations, though in many respects I have arrived at results different from either.

² Acts vi. 2 διακονεῖν τραπεζαῖς.

Seven were confined to this class¹. The object in creating this new office is stated to be not the partial but the entire relief of the Apostles from the serving of tables. This being the case, the appointment of Hellenists (for such they would appear to have been from their names²) is a token of the liberal and loving spirit which prompted the Hebrew members of the Church in the selection of persons to fill the office.

The Seven
were deacons.

I have assumed that the office thus established represents the later diaconate; for though this point has been much disputed, I do not see how the identity of the two can reasonably be called in question³. If the word deacon does not occur in the passage, yet the corresponding verb and substantive, διακονεῖν and διακονία, are repeated more than once. The functions moreover are substantially those which devolved on the deacons of the earliest ages, and which still in theory, though not altogether in practice, form the primary duties of the office. Again, it seems clear from the emphasis with which St Luke dwells on the new institution, that he looks on the establishment of this office, not as an isolated incident, but as the initiation of a new order of things in the Church. It is in short one of those representative facts, of which the earlier part of his narrative is almost wholly made up. Lastly, the tradition of the identity of the two offices has been unanimous from the earliest times. Irenæus, the first writer who alludes to the appointment of the Seven, distinctly holds them to have been deacons⁴. The Roman Church some centuries later, though the presbytery had largely increased meanwhile, still restricted the number of deacons to seven, thus preserving the memory of the first institution of this office⁵.

¹ So for instance Vitringa de Synag. III. 2. 5, p. 928 sq. and Mosheim de Reb. Christ. p. 119, followed by many later writers.

² This inference however is far from certain, since many Hebrews bore Greek names, e.g. the Apostles Andrew and Philip.

³ It is maintained by Vitringa III. 2. 5, p. 920 sq., that the office of the Seven was different from the later diaconate. He quotes Chrysost. Hom. 14 in Act. (ix. p. 115, ed. Montf.) and Can. 10 of the Quinisextine Council (comp.

p. 187, note 1) as favouring his view. With strange perversity Böhmer (Diss. Jur. Eccl. p. 349 sq.) supposes them to be presbyters, and this account has been adopted even by Ritschl, p. 355 sq. According to another view the office of the Seven branched out into the two later orders of the diaconate and the presbyterate, Lange Apost. Zeit. II. i. p. 75.

⁴ Iren. i. 26. 3, iii. 12. 10, iv. 15. 1.

⁵ In the middle of the third century, when Cornelius writes to Fabius, Rome has 46 presbyters but only 7 deacons, Euseb. H.E. vi. 43; see Routh's Rel.

And in like manner a canon of the Council of Neocæsarea (A.D. 315) enacted that there should be no more than seven deacons in any city however great¹, alleging the apostolic model. This rule, it is true, was only partially observed; but the tradition was at all events so far respected, that the creation of an order of subdeacons was found necessary in order to remedy the inconvenience arising from the limitation².

The narrative in the Acts, if I mistake not, implies that the office thus created was entirely new. Some writers however have explained the incident as an extension to the Hellenists of an institution which already existed among the Hebrew Christians and is implied in the 'younger men' mentioned in an earlier part of St Luke's history³. This view seems not only to be groundless in itself, but also to contradict the general tenour of the narrative. It would appear moreover, that the institution was not merely new within the Christian Church, but novel absolutely. There is no reason for connecting it with any prototype existing in the Jewish community. The narrative offers no hint that it was either a continuation of the order of Levites or an adaptation of an office in the synagogue. The philanthropic purpose for which it was established presents no direct point of contact with the known duties of either. The Levite, whose function it was to keep the beasts for slaughter, to cleanse away the blood and offal of the sacrifices, to serve as porter at the temple gates, and to swell the chorus of sacred psalmody, bears no strong resemblance to the Christian deacon, whose ministrations lay among the widows and orphans, and whose time was almost wholly spent in works of charity. And again, the Chazan or attendant in the synagogue, whose duties were confined to the care of the building and the preparation for service, has more in common with the modern parish clerk than with the deacon in the infant Church of

The office
was a new institution,

not borrowed from the Levitical order,

nor from the synagogue.

Sacr. III. p. 23, with his note p. 61. Even in the fourth and fifth centuries the number of Roman deacons still remained constant: see Ambrosiast. on 1 Tim. iii. 13, Sozom. vii. 19 διάκονοι δὲ παρὰ Ῥωμαίους εἰσέτι νῦν εἰσὶν ἑπτὰ... παρὰ δὲ τοῖς ἄλλοις ἀδιάφορος ὁ τούτων ἀριθμός.

¹ Concil. Neocæs. c. 14 (Routh Rel.

Sacr. IV. p. 185): see Bingham's Antiq. II. 20. 19. At the Quinisextine or 2nd Trullan council (A. D. 692) this Neocæsarean canon was refuted and rejected: see Hefele Conciliengesch. III. p. 304, and Vitringa p. 922.

² See Bingham III. 1. 3.

³ Acts v. 6, 10. This is the view of Mosheim de Reb. Christ. p. 114.

Christ¹. It is therefore a baseless, though a very common, assumption that the Christian diaconate was copied from the arrangements of the synagogue. The Hebrew Chazan is not rendered by deacon in the Greek Testament; but a different word is used instead². We may fairly presume that St Luke dwells at such length on the establishment of the diaconate, because he regards it as a novel creation.

Teaching
only incidental to the office.

Thus the work primarily assigned to the deacons was the relief of the poor. Their office was essentially a 'serving of tables,' as distinguished from the higher function of preaching and instruction. But partly from the circumstances of their position, partly from the personal character of those first appointed, the deacons at once assumed a prominence which is not indicated in the original creation of the office. Moving about freely among the poorer brethren and charged with the relief of their material wants, they would find opportunities of influence which were denied to the higher officers of the Church who necessarily kept themselves more aloof. The devout zeal of a Stephen or a Philip would turn these opportunities to the best account; and thus, without ceasing to be dispensers of alms, they became also ministers of the Word. The Apostles themselves had directed that the persons chosen should be not only 'men of honest report,' but also 'full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom': and this careful foresight, to which the extended influence of the diaconate may be ascribed, proved also the security against its abuse. But still the work of teaching must be traced rather to the capacity of the individual officer than to the direct functions of the office. St Paul, writing thirty years later, and stating the requirements of the diaconate, lays the stress mainly on those qualifications which would be most important in persons moving about from house to house and entrusted with the distribution of alms. While he requires that they shall hold the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience, in other words, that they shall be sincere believers, he is not anxious, as in the case of the presbyters, to secure 'aptness to teach,' but demands especially that they shall be free from certain vicious habits, such as

¹ Vitringa (III. 2. 4, p. 914 sq., III. 2. 22, p. 1130 sq.) derives the Christian deacon from the Chazan of the synagogue. Among other objections to this view, the fact that as a rule there was only one Chazan to each synagogue must not be overlooked.

² ὑπηρέτης, Luke iv. 20.

a love of gossiping, and a greed of paltry gain, into which they might easily fall from the nature of their duties¹.

From the mother Church of Jerusalem the institution spread to Gentile Christian brotherhoods. By the 'helps'² in the First Epistle to the Corinthians (A.D. 57), and by the 'ministration'³ in the Epistle to the Romans (A.D. 58), the diaconate solely or chiefly seems to be intended; but besides these incidental allusions, the latter epistle bears more significant testimony to the general extension of the office. The strict seclusion of the female sex in Greece and in some Oriental countries necessarily debarred them from the ministrations of men: and to meet the want thus felt, it was found necessary at an early date to admit women to the diaconate. A woman-deacon belonging to the Church of Cenchreæ is mentioned in the Epistle to the Romans⁴. As time advances, the diaconate becomes still more prominent. In the Philippian Church a few years later (about A.D. 62) the deacons take their rank after the presbyters, the two orders together constituting the recognised ministry of the Christian society there⁵. Again, passing over another interval of some years, we find St Paul in the First Epistle to Timothy (about A.D. 66) giving express directions as to the qualifications of men-deacons and women-deacons alike⁶. From the tenour of his language it seems clear that in the Christian communities of proconsular Asia at all events the institution was so common that ministerial organization would be considered incomplete without it. On the other hand we may perhaps infer from the instructions which he sends about the same time to Titus in Crete, that he did not consider it indispensable; for while he mentions having given direct orders to his delegate to appoint presbyters in every city, he is silent about a diaconate⁷.

2. While the diaconate was thus an entirely new creation, called forth by a special emergency and developed by the progress of events, the early history of the presbyterate was different. If the sacred historian dwells at length on the institution of the lower office but is silent about the first beginnings of the higher, the explanation seems to be, that the latter had not the claim of novelty like the former.

¹ 1 Tim. iii. 8 sq.

² 1 Cor. xii. 28.

³ Rom. xii. 7.

⁴ Rom. xvi. 1.

⁵ Phil. i. 1.

⁶ 1 Tim. iii. 8 sq.

⁷ Tit. i. 5 sq.

Spread of the diaconate to Gentile
churches.

2. PRESBYTERS, not a new office,

The Christian Church in its earliest stage was regarded by the body of the Jewish people as nothing more than a new sect springing up by the side of the old. This was not unnatural; for the first disciples conformed to the religion of their fathers in all essential points, practising circumcision, observing the sabbaths, and attending the temple-worship. The sects in the Jewish commonwealth were not, properly speaking, nonconformists. They only superadded their own special organization to the established religion of their country, which for the most part they were careful to observe. The institution of synagogues was flexible enough to allow free scope for wide divergences of creed and practice. Different races as the Cyrenians and Alexandrians, different classes of society as the freedmen¹, perhaps also different sects as the Sadducees or the Essenes, each had or could have their own special synagogue², where they might indulge their peculiarities without hindrance. As soon as the expansion of the Church rendered some organization necessary, it would form a 'synagogue' of its own. The Christian congregations in Palestine long continued to be designated by this name³, though the term 'ecclesia' took its place from the very first in heathen countries. With the synagogue itself they would naturally, if not necessarily, adopt the normal government of a synagogue, and a body of elders or presbyters would be chosen to direct the religious worship and partly also to watch over the temporal well-being of the society.

but adopted from the synagogue.

Occasion of its adoption.

Hence the silence of St Luke. When he first mentions the presbyters, he introduces them without preface, as though the institution were a matter of course. But the moment of their introduction is significant. I have pointed out elsewhere⁴ that the two persecutions, of which St Stephen and St James were respectively the chief victims, mark two important stages in the diffusion of the Gospel. Their connexion with the internal organization of the Church is not less remarkable. The first results directly from the establishment of

¹ Acts vi. 9.

² It is stated, that there were no less than 480 synagogues in Jerusalem. The number is doubtless greatly exaggerated, but must have been very considerable: see Vitringa prol. 4, p. 28, and i. i. 14, p. 253.

³ James ii. 2. Epiphanius (xxx. 18, p. 142) says of the Ebionites, συναγω- γὴν οὗτοι καλοῦσι τὴν ἑαυτῶν ἐκκλησίαν, καὶ οὐχὶ ἐκκλησίαν. See also Hieron. Epist. cxii. 13 (i. p. 746. ed. Vall.) 'per totas orientis synagogas,' speaking of the Nazareans; though his meaning is not altogether clear. Comp. Test. xii Patr. Benj. 11.

⁴ See Galatians p. 293.

the lowest order in the ministry, the diaconate. To the second may probably be ascribed the adoption of the next higher grade, the presbytery. This later persecution was the signal for the dispersion of the Twelve on a wider mission. Since Jerusalem would no longer be their home as hitherto, it became necessary to provide for the permanent direction of the Church there; and for this purpose the usual government of the synagogue would be adopted. Now at all events for the first time we read of 'presbyters' in connexion with the Christian brotherhood at Jerusalem¹.

From this time forward all official communications with the mother Church are carried on through their intervention. To the presbyters Barnabas and Saul bear the alms contributed by the Gentile Churches². The presbyters are persistently associated with the Apostles, in convening the congress, in the superscription of the decree, and in the general settlement of the dispute between the Jewish and Gentile Christians³. By the presbyters St Paul is received many years later on his last visit to Jerusalem, and to them he gives an account of his missionary labours and triumphs⁴.

But the office was not confined to the mother Church alone. Jewish presbyteries existed already in all the principal cities of the dispersion, and Christian presbyteries would early occupy a not less wide area. On their very first missionary journey the Apostles Paul and Barnabas are described as appointing presbyters in every church⁵. The same rule was doubtless carried out in all the brotherhoods founded later; but it is mentioned here and here only, because the mode of procedure on this occasion would suffice as a type of the Apostles' dealings elsewhere under similar circumstances.

The name of the presbyter then presents no difficulty. But what must be said of the term 'bishop'? It has been shown that in the apostolic writings the two are only different designations of one and the same office⁶. How and where was this second name originated?

To the officers of Gentile Churches alone is the term applied, as a synonyme for presbyter. At Philippi⁷, in Asia Minor⁸, in Crete⁹, Presbytery of Jerusalem.

Extension of the office to Gentile Churches.

Presbyters called also bishops,

but only in Gentile
Churches.

¹ Acts xi. 30. On the sequence of events at this time see Galatians p. 123.

² Acts xi. 30.

³ Acts xv. 2, 4, 6, 22, 23, xvi. 4.

⁴ Acts xxi. 18.

⁵ Acts xiv. 23.

⁶ See above, p. 94 sq.

⁷ Phil. i. 1.

⁸ Acts xx. 28, 1 Tim. iii. 1, 2; comp.

1 Pet. ii. 25, v. 2.

⁹ Tit. i. 7.

Possible origin of the term.

the presbyter is so called. In the next generation the title is employed in a letter written by the Greek Church of Rome to the Greek Church of Corinth¹. Thus the word would seem to be especially Hellenic. Beyond this we are left to conjecture. But if we may assume that the directors of religious and social clubs among the heathen were commonly so called², it would naturally occur, if not to the Gentile Christians themselves, at all events to their heathen associates, as a fit designation for the presiding members of the new society. The infant Church of Christ, which appeared to the Jew as a synagogue, would be regarded by the heathen as a confraternity³. But whatever may have been the origin of the term, it did not altogether dispossess the earlier name 'presbyter,' which still held its place as a synonyme even in Gentile congregations⁴. And, when at length the term bishop was appropriated to a higher office in the Church, the latter became again, as it had been at first, the sole designation of the Christian elder⁵.

Twofold duties of the presbyter.

The duties of the presbyters were twofold. They were both rulers and instructors of the congregation. This double function appears in St Paul's expression 'pastors and teachers'⁶, where, as the form of the original seems to show, the two words describe the same office under different aspects. Though government was probably the first conception of the office, yet the work of teaching must have fallen to the presbyters from the very first and have assumed greater prominence as time went on. With the growth of the Church, the visits of the apostles and evangelists to any individual community must have become less and less frequent, so that the burden of instruction would be gradually transferred from these missionary preachers to the local officers of the congregation. Hence St Paul

The function of teaching.

¹ Clem. Rom. 42, 45.

² The evidence however is slight: see above p. 93, note 2. Some light is thrown on this subject by the fact that the Roman government seems first to have recognised the Christian brotherhoods in their corporate capacity, as burial clubs: see de Rossi Rom. Sottterr. i. 371.

³ On these clubs or confraternities see Renan Les Apôtres p. 351 sq.; comp. Saint Paul p. 239.

⁴ Acts xx. 17, 1 Tim. v. 17, Tit. i. 5, 1 Pet. v. 1, Clem. Rom. 21, 44.

⁵ Other more general designations in the New Testament are οἱ προϊστάμενοι (1 Thess. v. 12, Rom. xii. 8; comp. 1 Tim. v. 17), or οἱ ἡγούμενοι (Hebr. xiii. 7, 17, 24). For the former comp. Hermas Vis. ii. 4, Justin. Apol. i. 67 (ὁ προϊστάς); for the latter, Clem. Rom. i. 21, Hermas Vis. ii. 2, iii. 9 (οἱ προηγούμενοι).

⁶ Ephes. iv. 11 τοὺς δὲ ποιμένας καὶ διδασκάλους. For ποιμαίνειν applied to the ἐπίσκοπος or πρεσβύτερος see Acts xx. 28, 1 Pet. v. 2; comp. 1 Pet. ii. 25.

in two passages, where he gives directions relating to bishops or presbyters, insists specially on the faculty of teaching as a qualification for the position¹. Yet even here this work seems to be regarded rather as incidental to than as inherent in the office. In the one epistle he directs that double honour shall be paid to those presbyters who have ruled well, but especially to such as 'labour in word and doctrine²,' as though one holding this office might decline the work of instruction. In the other, he closes the list of qualifications with the requirement that the bishop (or presbyter) hold fast the faithful word in accordance with the apostolic teaching 'that he may be able both to exhort in the healthy doctrine and to confute gainsayers,' alleging as a reason the pernicious activity and growing numbers of the false teachers. Nevertheless there is no ground for supposing that the work of teaching and the work of governing pertained to separate members of the presbyteral college³. As each had his special gift, so would he devote himself more or less exclusively to the one or the other of these sacred functions.

3. It is clear then that at the close of the apostolic age, the two 3. BISHOPS. lower orders of the threefold ministry were firmly and widely established; but traces of the third and highest order, the episcopate properly so called, are few and indistinct.

For the opinion hazarded by Theodoret and adopted by many The office not a continuation later writers⁴, that the same officers in the Church who were first

¹ 1 Tim. iii. 2, Tit. i. 9.

² 1 Tim. v. 17 μάλιστα οἱ κοπιῶντες ἐν λόγῳ καὶ διδασκαλίᾳ. At a much later date we read of 'presbyteri doctores,' whence it may perhaps be inferred that even then the work of teaching was not absolutely indispensable to the presbyteral office; Act. Perp. et Fel. 13, Cyprian. Epist. 29; see Ritschl p. 352.

³ The distinction of lay or ruling elders, and ministers proper or teaching elders, was laid down by Calvin and has been adopted as the constitution of several presbyterian Churches. This interpretation of St Paul's language is refuted by Rothe p. 224, Ritschl p. 352 sq., and Schaff Hist. of Apost. Ch. II. p. 312, besides older writers such as Vittinga and Mosheim.

⁴ On 1 Tim. iii. 1, τοὺς δὲ νῦν καλουμένους ἐπισκόπους ἀποστόλους ὠνόμαζον τοῦ δὲ χρόνου προΐοντος τὸ μὲν τῆς ἀποστολῆς ὄνομα τοῖς ἀλληθῶς ἀποστόλοις κατέλιπον, τὸ δὲ τῆς ἐπισκοπῆς τοῖς πάλαι καλουμένοις ἀποστόλοις ἐπέθεσαν. See also his note on Phil. i. 1. Comp. Wordsworth Theoph. Angl. c. x, Blunt First Three Centuries p. 81. Theodoret, as usual, has borrowed from Theodore of Mopsuestia on 1 Tim. iii. 1, 'Qui vero nunc episcopi nominantur, illi tunc apostoli dicebantur ... Beatis vero apostolis decedentibus, illi qui post illos ordinati sunt ... grave existimaverunt apostolorum sibi vindicare nuncupationem; dividerunt ergo ipsa nomina etc.' (Raban. Maur. vi. p. 604 D ed. Migne). Theodore however makes a distinction between the two offices: nor does he,

of the apostolate. called apostles came afterwards to be designated bishops, is baseless.

If the two offices had been identical, the substitution of the one name for the other would have required some explanation. But in fact the functions of the Apostle and the bishop differed widely. The Apostle, like the prophet or the evangelist, held no local office. He was essentially, as his name denotes, a missionary, moving about from place to place, founding and confirming new brotherhoods. The only ground on which Theodoret builds his theory is a false interpretation of a passage in St Paul. At the opening of the Epistle to Philippi the presbyters (here called bishops) and deacons are saluted, while in the body of the letter one Epaphroditus is mentioned as an 'apostle' of the Philippians. If 'apostle' here had the meaning which is thus assigned to it, all the three orders of the ministry would be found at Philippi. But this interpretation will not stand. The true Apostle, like St Peter or St John, bears this title as the messenger, the delegate, of Christ Himself: while Epaphroditus is only so styled as the messenger of the Philippian brotherhood; and in the very next clause the expression is explained by the statement that he carried their alms to St Paul¹. The use of the word here has a parallel in another passage², where messengers (or apostles) of the churches are mentioned. It is not therefore to the apostle that we must look for the prototype of the bishop. How far indeed and in what sense the bishop may be called a successor of the Apostles, will be a proper subject for consideration: but the succession at least does not consist in an identity of office.

The episcopate developed out of the presbytery.

The history of the name itself suggests a different account of the origin of the episcopate. If bishop was at first used as a synonyme for presbyter and afterwards came to designate the higher officer under whom the presbyters served, the episcopate properly so called would seem to have been developed from the subordinate office. In other words, the episcopate was formed not out of the apostolic order by localisation but out of the presbyteral by elevation: and the title, which originally was common to all, came at length to be appropriated to the chief among them³.

like Theodoret, misinterpret Phil. ii. 25. The commentator Hilary also, on Ephes. iv. 11, says 'apostoli episcopi sunt.'

¹ See Phil. ii. 25, with the note.

² 2 Cor. viii. 23, see Galatians p. 95, note 3.

³ A parallel instance from Athenian institutions will illustrate this usage.

If this account be true, we might expect to find in the mother Church of Jerusalem, which as the earliest founded would soonest ripen into maturity, the first traces of this developed form of the ministry. Nor is this expectation disappointed. James the Lord's brother alone, within the period compassed by the apostolic writings, can claim to be regarded as a bishop in the later and more special sense of the term. In the language of St Paul he takes precedence even of the earliest and greatest preachers of the Gospel, St Peter and St John¹, where the affairs of the Jewish Church specially are concerned. In St Luke's narrative he appears as the local representative of the brotherhood in Jerusalem, presiding at the congress, whose decision he suggests and whose decree he appears to have framed², receiving the missionary preachers as they revisit the mother Church³, acting generally as the referee in communications with foreign brotherhoods. The place assigned to him in the spurious Clementines, where he is represented as supreme arbiter over the Church universal in matters of doctrine, must be treated as a gross exaggeration. This kind of authority is nowhere conferred upon him in the apostolic writings: but his social and ecclesiastical position, as it appears in St Luke and St Paul, explains how the exaggeration was possible. And this position is the more remarkable if, as seems to have been the case, he was not one of the Twelve⁴.

On the other hand, though especially prominent, he appears in the Acts as a member of a body. When St Peter, after his escape from prison is about to leave Jerusalem, he desires that his deliverance shall be reported to 'James and the brethren⁵.' When again St Paul on his last visit to the Holy City goes to see James, we are told that all the presbyters were present⁶. If in some passages St James is named by himself, in others he is omitted and the presbyters alone are mentioned⁷. From this it may be inferred that though but yet not isolated from his presbytery.

The ἐπιστάτης was chairman of a body of ten πρόεδροι, who themselves were appointed in turn by lot to serve from a larger body of fifty πρωτάρχεις. Yet we find the ἐπιστάτης not only designated πρωτάνης par excellence (Demosth. Timocr. § 157), but even addressed by this name in the presence of the other πρόεδροι (Thuc. vi. 14).

¹ Gal. ii. 9; see the note.

² Acts xv. 13 sq. St James speaks last and apparently with some degree of authority (ἐγὼ κλένω ver. 19). The decree is clearly framed on his recommendations, and some indecisive coincidences of style with his epistle have been pointed out.

³ Acts xxi. 18; comp. xii. 17. See also Gal. i. 19, ii. 12.

⁴ See Galatians p. 247 sq.

⁵ Acts xii. 17.

⁶ Acts xxi. 18.

⁷ Acts xi. 30; comp. xv. 4, 23, xvi. 4.

holding a position superior to the rest, he was still considered as a member of the presbytery; that he was in fact the head or president of the college. What power this presidency conferred, how far it was recognised as an independent official position, and to what degree it was due to the ascendancy of his personal gifts, are questions which in the absence of direct information can only be answered by conjecture. But his close relationship with the Lord, his rare energy of character, and his rigid sanctity of life which won the respect even of the unconverted Jews¹, would react upon his office, and may perhaps have elevated it to a level which was not definitely contemplated in its origin.

Nobishops
as yet in the Gentile
Churches.

But while the episcopal office thus existed in the mother Church of Jerusalem from very early days, at least in a rudimentary form, the New Testament presents no distinct traces of such organization in the Gentile congregations. The government of the Gentile churches,

Two stages of development:

as there represented, exhibits two successive stages of development tending in this direction; but the third stage, in which episcopacy definitely appears, still lies beyond the horizon.

(1) Occasional supervision
by the Apostles themselves.

(1) We have first of all the Apostles themselves exercising the superintendence of the churches under their care, sometimes in person and on the spot, sometimes at a distance by letter or by message. The imaginary picture drawn by St Paul, when he directs the punishment of the Corinthian offender, vividly represents his position in this respect. The members of the church are gathered together, the elders, we may suppose, being seated apart on a dais or tribune; he himself, as president, directs their deliberations, collects their votes, pronounces sentence on the guilty man². How the absence of the apostolic president was actually supplied in this instance, we do not know. But a council was held; he did direct their verdict 'in spirit though not in person'; and 'the majority' condemned the offender³. In the same way St Peter, giving directions to the elders, claims a place among them. The title 'fellow-presbyter,' which he applies to himself⁴, would doubtless recal to the memory of his readers the occasions when he himself had presided with the elders and guided their deliberations.

¹ See Galatians p. 348 sq.

² 1 Cor. v. 3 sq.

³ 2 Cor. ii. 6 ἡ ἐπιτιμία αὐτῆς ἡ ὑπὸ τῶν πλειόνων.

⁴ 1 Pet. v. 1.

(2) As the first stage then, the Apostles themselves were the (2) Resi-superintendents of each individual church. But the wider spread of dence of the Gospel would diminish the frequency of their visits and impair the apostolic efficiency of such supervision. In the second stage therefore we find delegates.
them, at critical seasons and in important congregations, delegating some trustworthy disciple who should fix his abode in a given place for a time and direct the affairs of the church there. The Pastoral Epistles present this second stage to our view. It is the conception of a later age which represents Timothy as bishop of Ephesus and Titus as bishop of Crete¹. St Paul's own language implies that the position which they held was temporary. In both cases their term of office is drawing to a close, when the Apostle writes². But the conception is not altogether without foundation. With less permanence but perhaps greater authority, the position occupied by these apostolic delegates nevertheless fairly represents the functions of the bishop early in the second century. They were in fact the link between the Apostle whose superintendence was occasional and general and the bishop who exercised a permanent supervision over an individual congregation.

Beyond this second stage the notices in the apostolic writings do not carry us. The angels of the seven churches indeed are frequently
The angels in the Apocalypse not alleged as an exception³. But neither does the name 'angel' itself bishops.
suggest such an explanation⁴, nor is this view in keeping with the highly figurative style of this wonderful book. Its sublime imagery

¹ Const. Apost. vii. 46, Euseb. H. E. iii. 4, and later writers.

² See 1 Tim. i. 3, iii. 14, 2 Tim. iv. 9, 21, Tit. i. 5, iii. 12.

³ See for instance among recent writers Thiersch Gesch. der Apost. Kirche p. 278, Trench Epistles to the Seven Churches p. 47 sq., with others. This explanation is as old as the earliest commentators. Rothe supposes that the word anticipates the establishment of episcopacy, being a kind of prophetic symbol, p. 423 sq. Others again take the angel to designate the collective ministry, i.e. the whole body of priests and deacons. For various explanations see Schaff Hist. of Apost. Ch. ii. p. 223.

Rothe (p. 426) supposes that Diotrephes ο φιλοπρωτεύων αὐτῶν (3 Joh. 9) was a bishop. This cannot be pronounced impossible, but the language is far too indefinite to encourage such an inference.

⁴ It is conceivable indeed that a bishop or chief pastor should be called an angel or messenger of God or of Christ (comp. Hag. i. 13, Mal. ii. 7), but he would hardly be styled an angel of the church over which he presides. See the parallel case of ἀπόστολος above, p. 194. Vitringa (ii. 9, p. 550), and others after him, explain ἀγγελος in the Apocalypse by the מַלְאָךְ, the messenger or deputy of the synagogue. These however were only inferior officers, and could not be compared to stars or made responsible for the well-being of the churches; see Rothe p. 504.

True explanation.

seems to be seriously impaired by this interpretation. On the other hand St John's own language gives the true key to the symbolism. 'The seven stars,' so it is explained, 'are the seven angels of the seven churches, and the seven candlesticks are the seven churches'. This contrast between the heavenly and the earthly fires—the star shining steadily by its own inherent eternal light, and the lamp flickering and uncertain, requiring to be fed with fuel and tended with care—cannot be devoid of meaning. The star is the suprasensual counterpart, the heavenly representative; the lamp, the earthly realisation, the outward embodiment. Whether the angel is here conceived as an actual person, the celestial guardian, or only as a personification, the idea or spirit of the church, it is unnecessary for my present purpose to consider. But whatever may be the exact conception, he is identified with and made responsible for it to a degree wholly unsuited to any human officer. Nothing is predicated of him, which may not be predicated of it. To him are imputed all its hopes, its fears, its graces, its shortcomings. He is punished with it, and he is rewarded with it. In one passage especially the language applied to the angel seems to exclude the common interpretation. In the message to Thyatira the angel is blamed, because he suffers himself to be led astray by 'his wife Jezebel'. In this image of Ahab's idolatrous queen some dangerous and immoral teaching must be personified; for it does violence alike to the general tenour and to the individual expressions in the passage to suppose that an actual woman is meant. Thus the symbolism of the passage is entirely in keeping. Nor again is this mode of representation new. The 'princes' in the prophecy of Daniel³ present a very near if not an exact parallel to the angels of the Revelation. Here, as elsewhere, St John seems to adapt the imagery of this earliest apocalyptic book.

Indeed, if with most recent writers we adopt the early date of the Apocalypse of St John, it is scarcely possible that the episcopal organization should have been so mature when it was written. In this case probably not more than two or three years have elapsed from the date of the Pastoral Epistles⁴, and this interval seems quite

¹ Rev. i. 20.

² Rev. ii. 20 τῇ γυναικὶ σου Ἰεζάβελ. The word σου should probably be retained in the text: or at least, if not a correct reading, it seems to be a correct gloss.

³ Dan. x. 13, 20, 21.

⁴ The date of the Pastoral Epistles insufficient to account for so great a change in the administration of the Asiatic churches.

As late therefore as the year 70 no distinct signs of episcopal government have hitherto appeared in Gentile Christendom. Yet unless we have recourse to a sweeping condemnation of received documents, it seems vain to deny that early in the second century the episcopal office was firmly and widely established. Thus during the last three decades of the first century, and consequently during the lifetime of the latest surviving Apostle, this change must have been brought about. But the circumstances under which it was effected are shrouded in darkness; and various attempts have been made to read the obscure enigma. Of several solutions offered one at least deserves special notice. If Rothe's view cannot be accepted as final, its examination will at least serve to bring out the conditions of the problem: and for this reason I shall state and discuss it as briefly as possible¹. For the words in which the theory is stated I am myself responsible.

Episcopacy established in Gentile churches before the close of the century.

Rothe's solution.

'The epoch to which we last adverted marks an important crisis in the history of Christianity. The Church was distracted and dismayed by the growing dissensions between the Jewish and Gentile brethren and by the menacing apparition of Gnostic heresy. So long as its three most prominent leaders were living, there had been some security against the extravagance of parties, some guarantee of harmonious combination among diverse churches. But St Peter, St Paul, and St James, were carried away by death almost at the same time and in the face of this great emergency. Another blow too had fallen: the long-delayed judgment of God on the once Holy City was delayed no more. With the overthrow of Jerusalem the visible centre of the Church was removed. The keystone of the fabric was withdrawn, and the whole edifice threatened with ruin. There was a crying need for some organization which should cement together the diverse elements of Christian society and preserve it from disintegration.'

Importance of the crisis.

may be and probably is as late as A.D. 66 or 67; while the Apocalypse on this hypothesis was written not later than A.D. 70.

¹ See Rothe's Anfänge etc. pp. 354—392. Rothe's account of the origin of episcopacy is assailed (on grounds in many respects differing from those which I have urged) by Baur Ursprung des Episcopats p. 39 sq., and Ritschl p. 410 sq.

Origin of the Catholic Church.

'Out of this need the Catholic Church arose. Christendom had hitherto existed as a number of distinct isolated congregations, drawn in the same direction by a common faith and common sympathies, accidentally linked one with another by the personal influence and apostolic authority of their common teachers, but not bound together in a harmonious whole by any permanent external organization. Now at length this great result was brought about. The magnitude of the change effected during this period may be measured by the difference in the constitution and conception of the Christian Church as presented in the Pastoral Epistles of St Paul and the letters of St Ignatius respectively.'

Agency of the surviving Apostles.

'By whom then was the new constitution organized? To this question only one answer can be given. This great work must be ascribed to the surviving Apostles. St John especially, who built up the speculative theology of the Church, was mainly instrumental in completing its external constitution also; for Asia Minor was the centre from which the new movement spread. St John however was not the only Apostle or early disciple who lived in this province. St Philip is known to have settled in Hierapolis¹. St Andrew also seems to have dwelt in these parts². The silence of history clearly proclaims the fact which the voice of history but faintly suggests. If we hear nothing more of the Apostles' missionary labours, it is because they had organized an united Church, to which they had transferred the work of evangelization.'

Evidence of a second Apostolic Council.

'Of such a combined effort on the part of the Apostles, resulting in a definite ecclesiastical polity, in an united Catholic Church, no direct account is preserved: but incidental notices are not wanting; and in the general paucity of information respecting the whole period more than this was not to be expected³.'

Hegesip-
pus.

'(1) Eusebius relates that after the martyrdom of St James and the fall of Jerusalem, the remaining Apostles and personal dis-

¹ Papias in Euseb. H. E. iii. 39; Polycrates and Caius in Euseb. H. E. iii. 21.

² Muratorian Canon (circ. 170. A.D.), Routh Rel. Sacr. i. p. 394.

³ Besides the evidence which I have stated and discussed in the text, Rothe also brings forward a fragment of the Prædicatio Pauli (preserved in the tract de Baptismo Hæreticorum, which is included among Cyprian's works, app. p. 30, ed. Fell; see Galatians p. 337 note), where the writer mentions a meeting of St Peter and St Paul in Rome. The main question however is so slightly affected thereby, that I have not thought it necessary to investigate the value and bearing of this fragment.

ciples of the Lord, with his surviving relations, met together and after consultation unanimously appointed Symeon the son of Clopas to the vacant see¹. It can hardly be doubted, that Eusebius in this passage quotes from the earlier historian Hegesippus, from whom he has derived the other incidents in the lives of James and Symeon: and we may well believe that this council discussed larger questions than the appointment of a single bishop, and that the constitution and prospects of the Church generally came under deliberation. It may have been on this occasion that the surviving Apostles partitioned out the world among them, and 'Asia was assigned to John².'

(2) A fragment of Irenæus points in the same direction. Irenæus. Writing of the holy eucharist he says, 'They who have paid attention to the second ordinances of the Apostles know that the Lord appointed a new offering in the new covenant³.' By these 'second ordinances' must be understood some later decrees or injunctions than those contained in the apostolic epistles: and these would naturally be framed and promulgated by such a council as the notice of Eusebius suggests.'

(3) To the same effect St Clement of Rome writes, that the Clement of Apostles, having appointed elders in every church and foreseeing Rome. the disputes which would arise, 'afterwards added a codicil (supplementary direction) that if they should fall asleep, other approved men should succeed to their office⁴.' Here the pronouns 'they,' 'their,' must refer, not to the first appointed presbyters, but to the Apostles themselves. Thus interpreted, the passage contains a distinct notice of the institution of bishops as successors of the Apostles; while in the word 'afterwards' is involved an allusion to the later council to which the 'second ordinances' of Irenæus also refer⁵.'

¹ Euseb. H. E. iii. 11.

² According to the tradition reported by Origen as quoted in Euseb. H. E. iii. 1.

³ One of the Pfaffian fragments, no. xxxviii, p. 854 in Stieren's edition of Irenæus.

⁴ Clem. Rom. § 44 κατέστησαν τοὺς προεξημένους (sc. πρεσβυτέρους) καὶ μεταξὺ ἐπινομήνῃ δαδάσασιν, ὅπως, ἐὰν κοιμηθῶσιν, διαδέξωνται ἕτεροι δεδοκιμασμένοι ἄνδρες τὴν λειτουργίαν αὐτῶν. The interpretation of the passage depends on the persons intended in κοιμηθῶσιν and αὐτῶν (see the notes on the passage).

⁵ A much more explicit though somewhat later authority may be quoted in favour of his view. The Ambrosian Hilary on Ephes. iv. 12, speaking of the change from the presbyteral to the episcopal form of government, says 'immutata est ratio, prospiciente concilio, ut non ordo etc.' If the reading be correct, I suppose he was thinking of the Apostolic Constitutions. See also the expression of St

Results of the Council.

‘These notices seem to justify the conclusion that immediately after the fall of Jerusalem a council of the apostles and first teachers of the Gospel was held to deliberate on the crisis, and to frame measures for the well-being of the Church. The centre of the system then organized was episcopacy, which at once secured the compact and harmonious working of each individual congregation, and as the link of communication between separate brotherhoods formed the whole into one undivided Catholic Church. Recommended by this high authority, the new constitution was immediately and generally adopted.’

Value of Rothe's
theory.

This theory, which is maintained with much ability and vigour, attracted considerable notice, as being a new defence of episcopacy advanced by a member of a presbyterian Church. On the other hand, its intrinsic value seems to have been unduly depreciated; for, if it fails to give a satisfactory solution, it has at least the merit of stating the conditions of the problem with great distinctness, and of pointing out the direction to be followed. On this account it seemed worthy of attention.

The evidence examined.
Hegesip-
pus.

It must indeed be confessed that the historical notices will not bear the weight of the inference built upon them. (1) The account of Hegesippus (for to Hegesippus the statement in Eusebius may fairly be ascribed) confines the object of this gathering to the appointment of a successor to St James. If its deliberations had exerted that vast and permanent influence on the future of the Church which Rothe's theory supposes, it is scarcely possible that this early historian should have been ignorant of the fact or knowing it should have passed it over in silence. (2) The genuineness of the Pfaffian fragments of Irenæus must always remain doubtful¹. Independently of the mystery which hangs over their publication, the very passage quoted throws great suspicion on their authorship; for the expression in question² seems naturally to refer to the so-called Apostolic Constitutions, which have been swelled to their present size by the Irenæus.

Jerome on Tit. i. 5 (quoted below p. 204) ‘in toto orbe decretum est.’

¹ The controversial treatises on either side are printed in Stieren's Irenæus II. p. 381 sqq. It is sufficient here to state that shortly after the transcription of these fragments by Pfaff, the Turin MS from which they were taken disappeared; so that there was no means of testing the accuracy of the transcriber or ascertaining the character of the MS.

² The expression αἱ δευτέρα τῶν ἀποστόλων διατάξεις closely resembles the language of these Constitutions; see Hippol. p. 74, 82 (Lagarde).

accretions of successive generations, but can hardly have existed even in a rudimentary form in the age of Irenæus, or if existing have been regarded by him as genuine. If he had been acquainted with such later ordinances issued by the authority of an apostolic council, is it conceivable that in his great work on heresies he should have omitted to quote a sanction so unquestionable, where his main object is to show that the doctrine of the Catholic Church in his day represented the true teaching of the Apostles, and his main argument the fact that the Catholic bishops of his time derived their office by direct succession from the Apostles? (3) The passage in Clement the epistle of St Clement cannot be correctly interpreted by Rothe: for his explanation, though elaborately defended, disregards the purpose of the letter. The Corinthian Church is disturbed by a spirit of insubordination. Presbyters, who have faithfully discharged their duties, have nevertheless been ruthlessly expelled from office. St Clement writes in the name of the Roman Church to correct these irregularities. He reminds the Corinthians that the presbyteral office was established by the Apostles, who not only themselves appointed elders, but also gave directions that the vacancies caused from time to time by death should be filled up by other men of character, thus providing for a succession in the ministry. Consequently in these unworthy feuds they were setting themselves in opposition to officers of repute either actually nominated by Apostles, or appointed by those so nominated in accordance with the apostolic injunctions. There is no mention of episcopacy, properly so called, throughout the epistle; for in the language of St Clement, 'bishop' and 'presbyter' are still synonymous terms¹. Thus the pronouns 'they,' 'their,' refer naturally to the presbyters first appointed by the Apostles themselves. Whether (supposing the reading to be correct²) Rothe has rightly translated ἐπινομήν 'a codicil,' it is unnecessary to enquire, as the rendering does not materially affect the question.

Nor again does it appear that the rise of episcopacy was so sudden and so immediate, that an authoritative order issuing from an apostolic council alone can explain the phenomenon. In the mysterious period which comprises the last thirty years of the first νομήν; see the notes on the passage.

¹ See above pp. 95, 96.

² The right reading is probably ἐπι-

Episcopacy not a sudden creation, century, and on which history is almost wholly silent, episcopacy must, it is true, have been mainly developed. But before this period its beginnings may be traced, and after the close it is not yet fully matured. It seems vain to deny with Rothe¹ that the position of St James in the mother Church furnished the precedent and the pattern of the later episcopate. It appears equally mistaken to maintain, as this theory requires, that at the close of the first and the beginning of the second century the organization of all churches alike had arrived at the same stage of development and exhibited the episcopate in an equally perfect form.

but matured by a critical emergency

On the other hand, the emergency which consolidated the episcopal form of government is correctly and forcibly stated. It was remarked long ago by Jerome, that 'before factions were introduced into religion by the prompting of the devil,' the churches were governed by a council of elders, 'but as soon as each man began to consider those whom he had baptized to belong to himself and not to Christ, it was decided throughout the world that one elected from among the elders should be placed over the rest, so that the care of the church should devolve on him, and the seeds of schism be removed².' And again in another passage he writes to the same effect; 'When afterwards one presbyter was elected that he might be placed over the rest, this was done as a remedy against schism, that each man might not drag to himself and thus break up the Church of Christ³.' To the dissensions of Jew and Gentile converts, and to the disputes of Gnostic false teachers, the development of episcopacy may be mainly ascribed.

and in Asia Minor under the influence
of St John.

Nor again is Rothe probably wrong as to the authority mainly instrumental in effecting the change. Asia Minor was the adopted home of more than one Apostle after the fall of Jerusalem. Asia Minor too was the nurse, if not the mother, of episcopacy in the Gentile Churches. So important an institution, developed in a Christian community of which St John was the living centre and guide, could hardly have grown up without his sanction: and, as will be seen presently, early tradition very distinctly connects his name with the appointment of bishops in these parts.

But to the question how this change was brought about, a somewhat different answer must be given. We have seen that the Manner of its development. needs of the Church and the ascendancy of his personal character placed St James at the head of the Christian brotherhood in Jerusalem. Though remaining a member of the presbyteral council, he was singled out from the rest and placed in a position of superior responsibility. His exact power it would be impossible, and it is unnecessary, to define. When therefore after the fall of the city St John with other surviving Apostles removed to Asia Minor and found there manifold irregularities and threatening symptoms of disruption, he would not unnaturally encourage an approach in these Gentile Churches to the same organization, which had been signally blessed, and proved effectual in holding together the mother Church amid dangers not less serious. The existence of a council or college necessarily supposes a presidency of some kind, whether this presidency be assumed by each member in turn, or lodged in the hands of a single person¹. It was only necessary therefore for him to give permanence, definiteness, stability, to an office which already existed in germ. There is no reason however for supposing that any direct ordinance was issued to the churches. The evident utility and even pressing need of such an office, sanctioned by the most venerated name in Christendom, would be sufficient to secure its wide though gradual reception. Such a reception, it is true, supposes a substantial harmony and freedom of intercourse among the churches, which remained undisturbed by the troubles of the times; but the silence of history is not at all unfavourable to this supposition. In this way, during the historical blank which extends over half a century after the fall of Jerusalem, episcopacy was matured and the Catholic Church consolidated².

¹ p. 264 sq.

² On Tit. i. 5 (vii. p. 694, ed. Vall.).

³ Epist. cxlvi ad Evang. (i. p. 1082).

¹ The Ambrosian Hilary on Ephes. iv. 12 seems to say that the senior member was president; but this may be mere conjecture. The constitution of the synagogue does not aid materially in settling this question. In the New Testament at all events ἀρχισυνάγωγος is only another name for an elder of the synagogue (Mark v. 22, Acts xiii. 15, xviii. 8, 17; comp. Justin. Dial. c. Tryph. § 137), and therefore corresponds not to the bishop but to the presbyter of the Christian Church. Sometimes however ἀρχισυνάγωγος appears to denote the president of the council of elders: see Vitringa ii. 2. p. 586 sq., iii. 1. p. 610 sq. The opinions of Vitringa must be received with caution, as his tendency to press the resemblance between the government of the Jewish synagogue and the Christian Church is strong. The real likeness consists in the council of presbyters; but the three-fold order of the Christian ministry as a whole seems to have no counterpart in the synagogue.

² The expression 'Catholic Church' is found first in the Ignatian letter to

This view supported by the notices of individual churches.

At all events, when we come to trace the early history of the office in the principal churches of Christendom in succession, we shall find all the facts consistent with the account adopted here, while some of them are hardly reconcilable with any other. In this review it will be convenient to commence with the mother Church, and to take the others in order, as they are connected either by neighbourhood or by political or religious sympathy.

JERUSALEM.

St James.

1. The Church of JERUSALEM, as I have already pointed out, presents the earliest instance of a bishop. A certain official prominence is assigned to James the Lord's brother, both in the Epistles of St Paul and in the Acts of the Apostles. And the inference drawn from the notices in the canonical Scriptures is borne out by the tradition of the next ages. As early as the middle of the second century all parties concur in representing him as a bishop in the strict sense of the term¹. In this respect Catholic Christians and Ebionite Christians hold the same language: the testimony of Hegesippus on the one hand is matched by the testimony of the Clementine writings on the other. On his death, which is recorded as taking place immediately before the war of Vespasian, Symeon was appointed in his place². Hegesippus, who is our authority for this statement, distinctly regards Symeon as holding the same office with James, and no less distinctly calls him a bishop. This same historian also mentions the circumstance that one Thebuthis (apparently on this occasion), being disappointed of the bishopric, raised a schism and attempted to corrupt the virgin purity of the Church with false doctrine. As Symeon died in the reign of Trajan at an advanced age, it is not improbable that Hegesippus was born during his lifetime. Of the successors of Symeon a complete list is preserved by Eusebius³. The fact however that it comprises thirteen names within a period of less than thirty years must throw suspicion on the Smyrnæans § 8. In the Martyrdom of Polycarp it occurs several times, inser. and §§ 8, 16, 19. On its meaning see Westcott Canon p. 26, note (2nd ed.).

Later bishops.

¹ Hegesipp. in Euseb. H. E. ii. 23, iv. 22; Clem. Hom. xi. 35, Ep. Petr. init., and Ep. Clem. init.; Clem. Recogn. i. 43, 68, 73; Clem. Alex. in Euseb. ii. 1; Const. Apost. v. 8, vi. 14, viii. 35, 46.

² Hegesipp. in Euseb. H. E. iv. 22.

³ H. E. iv. 5. The episcopate of Justus the successor of Symeon commences about A.D. 108: that of Marcus the first Gentile bishop, A.D. 136. Thus thirteen bishops occupy only about twenty-eight years. Even after the foundation of Ælia Capitolina the succession is very rapid. In the period from Marcus (A.D. 136) to Narcissus (A.D. 190) we count fifteen bishops.

its accuracy. A succession so rapid is hardly consistent with the known tenure of life offices in ordinary cases: and if the list be correct, the frequent changes must be attributed to the troubles and uncertainties of the times¹. If Eusebius here also had derived his information from Hegesippus, it must at least have had some solid foundation in fact; but even then the alternation between Jerusalem and Pella, and the possible confusion of the bishops with other prominent members of the presbytery, might introduce much error. It appears however that in this instance he was indebted to less trustworthy sources of information². The statement that after the foundation of Aelia Capitolina (A.D. 136) Marcus presided over the mother Church, as its first Gentile bishop, need not be questioned; and beyond this point it is unnecessary to carry the investigation³.

Of other bishops in PALESTINE and the neighbourhood before the latter half of the second century no trustworthy notice is preserved, so far as I know. During the Roman episcopate of Victor however (about A.D. 190), we find three bishops, Theophilus of Cæsarea, Cassius of Tyre, and Clarus of Ptolemais, in conjunction with Narcissus of Jerusalem, writing an encyclical letter in favour of the western view in the Paschal controversy⁴. If indeed any reliance could be placed on the Clementine writings, the episcopate of Palestine was matured at a very early date: for St Peter is there represented as appointing bishops in every city which he visits, in Cæsarea, Tyre, Sidon, Berytus, Tripolis, and Laodicea⁵. And though the fictions of this theological romance have no direct historical value, it is

Other sees in Palestine and neighbouring countries.

The repetition of the same names however suggests that some conflict was going on during this interval.

¹ Parallels nevertheless may be found in the annals of the papacy. Thus from A.D. 882 to A.D. 904 there were thirteen popes: and in other times of trouble the succession has been almost as rapid.

² This may be inferred from a comparison of H. E. iv. 5 τοσοῦτον ἐξ ἐγγράφων παρείληφα with H. E. v. 12 αὶ τῶν αὐτόθι διαδοχῶν περιέχουσι. His information was probably taken from a list kept at Jerusalem; but the case of the spurious correspondence with Abgarus preserved in the archives of Edessa (H. E. i. 13) shows how treacherous such sources of information were.

³ Narcissus, who became bishop of Jerusalem in 190 A.D., might well have preserved the memory of much earlier times. His successor Alexander, in whose favour he resigned A.D. 214, speaks of him as still living at the advanced age of 116 (Euseb. H. E. vi. 11).

⁴ Euseb. H. E. v. 25.

⁵ Clem. Hom. iii. 68 sq. (Cæsarea), vii. 5 (Tyre), vii. 8 (Sidon), vii. 12 (Berytus), xi. 36 (Tripolis), xx. 23 (Laodicea): comp. Clem. Recogn. iii. 65, 66, 74, vi. 15, x. 68.

hardly probable that the writer would have indulged in such statements, unless an early development of the episcopate in these parts had invested his narrative with an air of probability. The institution would naturally spread from the Church of Jerusalem to the more important communities in the neighbourhood, even without the direct intervention of the Apostles.

ANTIOCH. 2. From the mother Church of the Hebrews we pass naturally to the metropolis of Gentile Christendom. ANTIOCH is traditionally reported to have received its first bishop Evodius from St Peter¹. The story may perhaps rest on some basis of truth, though no confidence can be placed in this class of statements, unless they are known to have been derived from some early authority. But of Ignatius, who stands second in the traditional catalogue of Antiochene bishops, we can speak with more confidence. He is designated a bishop by very early authors, and he evidently speaks as such. He writes to one bishop, Polycarp; he mentions by name another, Onesimus². He looks forward to the appointment of a successor at Antioch after his death³. He urges obedience to their bishops on his correspondents. And, lest it should be supposed that he uses the term in its earlier sense as a synonyme for presbyter, he in one passage mentions in conjunction the three orders of the ministry, the bishop, the presbyters, and the deacons⁴. Altogether it is plain that he looks upon the episcopal system as the authoritative form of government in those churches with which he is most directly concerned. It may be suggested indeed that he would hardly have enforced the claims of episcopacy, unless it were an object of attack, and its comparatively recent origin might therefore be inferred: but still some years would be required before it could have assumed that mature and definite form which it has in his letters. It seems impossible to decide, and it is needless to investigate, the exact date of the epistles of St Ignatius: but we cannot do wrong in placing them during the earliest years of the second century. The successor to whom Ignatius alludes is reported to have been Hero⁵; and from his time onward the list of Antiochene bishops is complete⁶. If the authen-

Later
bishops.

¹ Const. Apost. vii. 46, Euseb. H. E. iii. 22.

² Ephes. i.

³ Polyc. 8 (Syr.).

⁴ Polyc. 6. See above, p. 96.

⁵ Euseb. H. E. iii. 36.

⁶ Euseb. H. E. iv. 20.

ticity of the list, as a whole, is questionable, two bishops of Antioch at least during the second century, Theophilus and Serapion, are known as historical persons.

If the Clementine writings emanated, as seems probable, from Syria or Palestine¹, this will be the proper place to state their attitude with regard to episcopacy. Whether the opinions there advanced exhibit the recognised tenets of a sect or congregation, or the private views of the individual writer or writers, will probably never be ascertained; but, whatever may be said on this point, these heretical books outstrip the most rigid orthodoxy in their reverence for the episcopal office. Monarchy is represented as necessary to the peace of the Church². The bishop occupies the seat of Christ and must be honoured as the image of God³. And hence St Peter, as he moves from place to place, ordains bishops everywhere, as though this were the crowning act of his missionary labours⁴. The divergence of the Clementine doctrine from the tenets of Catholic Christianity only renders this phenomenon more remarkable, when we remember the very early date of these writings; for the Homilies cannot well be placed later than the end, and should perhaps be placed towards the beginning, of the second century.

3. We have hitherto been concerned only with the Greek Church of Syria. Of the early history of the SYRIAN CHURCH, strictly so called, no trustworthy account is preserved. The documents which profess to give information respecting it are comparatively late; and while their violent anachronisms discredit them as a whole, it is impossible to separate the fabulous from the historic⁵. It should be remarked however, that they exhibit a high sacerdotal view of the episcopate as prevailing in these churches from the earliest times of which any record is preserved⁶.

4. ASIA MINOR follows next in order; and here we find the

¹ See Galatians pp. 325, 326.

² Clem. Hom. iii. 62.

³ Clem. Hom. iii. 62, 66, 70. See below, p. 236.

⁴ See the references given above p. 207, note 5.

⁵ The Ancient Syriac Documents edited by Cureton and Wright. Some of these must be old, for they were seen by Eusebius in the archives of Edessa widest and most unequivocal traces of episcopacy at an early date. Clement of Alexandria distinctly states that St John went about from city to city, his purpose being 'in some places to establish bishops, in others to consolidate whole churches, in others again to appoint to the clerical office some one of those who had been signified by the Spirit'. 'The sequence of bishops,' writes Tertullian in like manner of Asia Minor, 'traced back to its origin will be found to rest on the authority of John².' And a writer earlier than either speaks of St John's 'fellow-disciples and bishops³' as gathered about him. The conclusiveness even of such testimony might perhaps be doubted, if it were not supported by other more direct evidence. At the beginning of the second century the genuine letters of Ignatius mention by name two bishops in these parts, Onesimus of Ephesus and Polycarp of Smyrna⁴. Of the former nothing more is known: the latter evidently writes as a bishop, for he distinguishes himself from his presbyters⁵, and is expressly so called by other writers besides Ignatius. His pupil Irenæus says of him, that he had 'not only been instructed by Apostles and conversed with many who had seen Christ but had also been established by Apostles in Asia as bishop in the Church at Smyrna⁶'. Polycrates also, a younger contemporary of Polycarp and himself bishop of Ephesus, designates him by this title⁷; and again in the letter written by his own church and giving an account of his martyrdom he is styled 'bishop of the Catholic Church in Smyrna⁸'. As Polycarp survived the middle of the second century dying at a very advanced age (about A.D. 166) the possibility of error on this point seems to be excluded: and indeed all historical evidence must be thrown aside as worthless, if testimony so strong can be disregarded.

(H. E. i. 13); but nevertheless they abound in the grossest anachronisms, e.g. pp. 17, 23.

⁶ See for instance pp. 13, 16, 18, 21, 23, 24, 26, 29, 30, 33, 34, 35, 42, 71. The succession to the episcopate is conferred by the 'Hand of Priesthood' through the Apostles, who received it from our Lord, and is derived ultimately from Moses and Aaron (p. 24).

Ignatian letters.

The short Greek of the Ignatian letters is probably corrupt or spurious: but from internal evidence this recension can hardly have been made later than the middle of the second century⁹, and its

¹ Quis Div. Salv. 42 (p. 959).

² Adv. Marc. iv. 5.

³ Muratorian Fragment, Routh Rel. Sacr. i. 394. Irenæus too, whose experience was drawn chiefly from Asia Minor, more than once speaks of bishops appointed by the Apostles, iii. 3. 1, v. 20. 1.

⁴ See above, p. 208.

⁵ Polyc. Phil. init.

⁶ Iren. iii. 3. 4. Comp. Tertull. de Præscr. 32.

⁷ In Euseb. v. 24.

⁸ Mart. Polyc. 16. Polycarp is called 'bishop of Smyrna' also in Mart. Ignat. 3.

⁹ See below, p. 232, note.

witness therefore is highly valuable. The staunch advocacy of the episcopate which distinguishes these writings is well known and will be considered hereafter. At present we are only concerned with the historical testimony which they bear to the wide extension and authoritative claims of the episcopal office. Besides Polycarp and Onesimus, mentioned by the true Ignatius, the writer names also Damas bishop of Magnesia¹ and Polybius bishop of Tralles²; and he urges on the Philadelphians also the duty of obedience to their bishop³, though the name is not given. It seems probable that these were not fictitious personages, for he would be anxious to give an air of reality to his writings; but whether or not we regard his testimony as indirectly affecting the age of Ignatius, for his own time at least it must be regarded as valid.

But the evidence is not confined to the persons and the churches already mentioned. Papias, who was a friend of Polycarp and had conversed with personal disciples of the Lord, is commonly designated bishop of Hierapolis⁴; and we learn from a younger contemporary Serapion⁵, that Claudius Apollinaris, known as a writer against the Montanists, also held this see in the reign of M. Aurelius. Again Sagaris the martyr who seems to have perished in the same persecution with Polycarp (A.D. 166)⁶ is designated bishop of Laodicea by one writing towards the close of the same century, who also alludes to Melito the contemporary of Sagaris as holding the see of Melito. Sardis⁷. The authority just quoted, Polycrates of Ephesus, who flourished in the last decade of the century, says moreover that he had had seven relations bishops before him, himself being the eighth, and that he followed their tradition⁸. When he wrote he had been 'sixty-five years in the Lord'; so that even if this period date from the time of his birth and not of his conversion or baptism, he must have been born scarcely a quarter of a century after the death of the last surviving Apostle, whose latest years were spent in the very Church over which Polycrates himself presided. It appears more-

Bishops of Hierapolis.

Polycrates and his relations.

¹ Magn. 2.

² Trall. 1.

³ Philad. 1.

⁴ Euseb. H. E. iii. 36.

⁵ In Euseb. H. E. v. 19.

⁶ See his contemporary Melito in Euseb. H. E. iv. 26.

⁷ Polycrates in Euseb. H. E. v. 24. Melito's office may be inferred from the contrast implied in περιμένων τὴν ἀπὸ τῶν οὐρανῶν ἐπισκοπὴν.

⁸ In Euseb. H. E. v. 24. See Galatians p. 345, note.

over from his language that none of these relations to whom he refers were surviving when he wrote.

Thus the evidence for the early and wide extension of episcopacy throughout proconsular Asia, the scene of St John's latest labours, may be considered irrefragable. And when we pass to other districts of Asia Minor, examples are not wanting, though these are neither so early nor so frequent. Marcion a native of Sinope is related to have been the son of a Christian bishop¹; and Marcion himself had elaborated his theological system before the middle of the second century. Again, a bishop of Eumenia, Thræseas by name, is stated by Polycrates to have been martyred and buried at Smyrna²; and, as he is mentioned in connexion with Polycarp, it may fairly be supposed that the two suffered in the same persecution. Dionysius of Corinth moreover writing to Amastris and the other churches of Pontus (about A.D. 170) mentions Palmas the bishop of this city³; and when the Paschal controversy breaks out afresh under Victor of Rome, we find this same Palmas putting his signature first to a circular letter as the senior of the bishops of Pontus⁴. An anonymous writer also, who took part in the Montanist controversy, speaks of two bishops of repute, Zoticus of Comana and Julianus of Apamea, as having resisted the impostures of the false prophetesses⁵. But indeed the frequent notices of encyclical letters written and synods held towards the close of the second century are a much more powerful testimony to the wide extension of episcopacy throughout the provinces of Asia Minor than the incidental mention of individual names. On one such occasion Polycrates speaks of the 'crowds' of bishops whom he had summoned to confer with him on the Paschal question⁶.

MACEDONIA
AND GREECE.

5. As we turn from Asia Minor to MACEDONIA and GREECE, the evidence becomes fainter and scantier. This circumstance is no doubt due partly to the fact that these churches were much less active and important during the second century than the Christian communities of Asia Minor, but the phenomena cannot be wholly explained by this consideration. When Tertullian in one of his

¹ [Tertull.] adv. omn. hæres. 6.

² In Euseb. H. E. v. 24.

³ In Euseb. H. E. iv. 23.

⁴ Euseb. H. E. v. 23.

⁵ In Euseb. H. E. v. 16. As Ap-amea on the Mæander is mentioned at the end of the chapter, probably this is the place meant.

⁶ In Euseb. H. E. v. 24 πολλὰ πλῆθη.

rhetorical flights challenges the heretical teachers to consult the apostolic churches, where 'the very sees of the Apostles still pre-<sup>Later development
of episco-
pacy.</sup>side,' adding, 'If Achaia is nearest to you, then you have Corinth; if you are not far from Macedonia, you have Philippi, you have the Thessalonians; if you can reach Asia, you have Ephesus': his main argument was doubtless just, and even the language would commend itself to his own age, for episcopacy was the only form of government known or remembered in the church when he wrote: but a careful investigation scarcely allows, and certainly does not encourage us, to place Corinth and Philippi and Thessalonica in the same category with Ephesus as regards episcopacy. The term 'apostolic see' was appropriate to the latter; but, so far as we know, it cannot be strictly applied to the former. During the early years of the second century, when episcopacy was firmly established in the principal churches of Asia Minor, Polycarp sends a letter to the Philippians. ^{Philippi.} He writes in the name of himself and his presbyters; he gives advice to the Philippians respecting the obligations and the authority of presbyters and deacons: he is minute in his instructions respecting one individual presbyter, Valens by name, who had been guilty of some crime; but throughout the letter he never once refers to their bishop; and indeed its whole tone is hardly consistent with the supposition that they had any chief officer holding the same prominent position at Philippi which he himself held at Smyrna. We are thus driven to the conclusion that episcopacy did not exist at all among the Philippians at this time, or existed only in an elementary form, so that the bishop was a mere president of the presbyteral council. At Thessalonica indeed, according to a tradition mentioned <sup>Thessalonica.</sup> by Origen², the same Caius whom St Paul describes as his host at Corinth was afterwards appointed bishop; but with so common a name the possibilities of error are great, even if the testimony were earlier in date and expressed in more distinct terms. When from Macedonia we pass to Achaia, the same phenomena present themselves. At the close of the first century Clement writes to Corinth, Corinth, as at the beginning of the second century Polycarp writes to Philippi. As in the latter epistle, so in the former, there is no allusion to the episcopal office: yet the main subject of Clement's letter

¹ Tertull. de Præscr. 37.

² On Rom. xvi. 23; 'Fertur sane traditione majorum' (rv. p. 86, ed. De-larue).

Athens.

is the expulsion and ill treatment of certain presbyters, whose authority he maintains as holding an office instituted by and banded down from the Apostles themselves. If Corinth however was without a bishop in the strict sense at the close of the first century, she cannot long have remained so. When some fifty years later Hegesippus stayed here on his way to Rome, Primus was bishop of this Church; and it is clear moreover from this writer's language that Primus had been preceded by several occupants of the see¹. Indeed the order of his narrative, so far as we can piece it together from the broken fragments preserved in Eusebius, might suggest the inference, not at all improbable in itself, that episcopacy had been established at Corinth as a corrective of the dissensions and feuds which had called forth Clement's letter². Again Dionysius, one of the immediate successors of Primus, was the writer of several letters of which fragments are extant³; and at the close of the century we meet with a later bishop of Corinth, Bacchyllus, who takes an active part in the Paschal controversy⁴. When from Corinth we pass on to Athens, a very early instance of a bishop confronts us, on authority which seems at first sight good. Eusebius represents Dionysius of Corinth, who wrote apparently about the year 170, as stating that his namesake the Areopagite, 'having been brought to the faith by the Apostle Paul according to the account in the Acts, was the first to be entrusted with the bishopric (or supervision) of the diocese (in the language of those times, the parish) of the Athenians⁵.' Now, if we could be sure that Eusebius was here reporting the exact words of Dionysius, the testimony though not conclusive would be entitled to great deference. In this case the easiest solution would be, that this ancient writer had not unnaturally confounded the earlier and later usage of the word bishop.

¹ In Euseb. H. E. iv. 22, καὶ ἐπέμενον ἡ ἐκκλησία ἡ Κορινθίων ἐν τῷ ὁρθῷ λόγῳ μέχρι Πρίμου ἐπισκοποῦντος ἐν Κορίνθῳ κ.τ.λ. A little later he speaks of ἐκάστη διαδοχῇ, referring apparently to Corinth among other churches.

² Hegesippus mentioned the feuds in the Church of Corinth during the reign of Domitian, which had occasioned the writing of this letter (H. E. iii. 16); and then after some account of Clement's epistle (μετὰ τινα περὶ τῆς Κλημεντος πρὸς Κορινθίους ἐπιστολῆς αὐτῷ εἰρημένα, H. E. iv. 22) he continued in the words which are quoted in the last note (ἐπιλέγοντος ταῦτα, καὶ ἐπέμενον ἡ ἐκκλησία κ.τ.λ.). On the probable tenor of Hegesippus' work see below, p. 218.

³ The fragments of Dionysius are found in Euseb. H. E. iv. 23. See also Routh Rel. Sacr. i. p. 177 sq.

⁴ Euseb. H. E. v. 22, 23.

⁵ In Euseb. H. E. iv. 23.

But it seems most probable that Eusebius (for he does not profess to be giving a direct quotation) has unintentionally paraphrased and interpreted the statement of Dionysius by the light of later ecclesiastical usages. However Athens, like Corinth, did not long remain without a bishop. The same Dionysius, writing to the Athenians, reminds them how, after the martyrdom of Publius their ruler (τὸν προεστῶτα), Quadratus becoming bishop sustained the courage and stimulated the faith of the Athenian brotherhood¹. If, as seems more probable than not, this was the famous Quadratus who presented his apology to Hadrian during that emperor's visit to Athens, the existence of episcopacy in this city is thrown back early in the century; even though Quadratus were not already bishop when Hadrian paid his visit.

6. The same writer, from whom we learn these particulars about CRETE. episcopacy at Athens, also furnishes information on the Church in CRETE. He writes letters to two different communities in this island, the one to Gortyna commending Philip who held this see, the other to the Cnossians offering words of advice to their bishop Pinytus¹. The first was author of a treatise against Marcion²; the latter wrote a reply to Dionysius, of which Eusebius preserved a brief notice¹.

7. Of episcopacy in THRACE, and indeed of the Thracian Church THRACE. generally, we read nothing till the close of the second century, when one Ælius Publius Julius bishop of Debeltum, a colony in this province, signs an encyclical letter³. The existence of a see at a place so unimportant implies the wide spread of episcopacy in these regions.

8. As we turn to ROME, we are confronted by a far more perplexing problem than any encountered hitherto. The attempt to decipher the early history of episcopacy here seems almost hopeless, where the evidence is at once scanty and conflicting. It has been often assumed that in the metropolis of the world, the seat of imperial rule, the spirit which dominated in the State must by natural pre-disposition and sympathy have infused itself into the Church also, so that a monarchical form of government would be developed more

¹ Euseb. H. E. iv. 23.

² Euseb. H. E. iv. 25.

³ Euseb. H. E. v. 19. The combination of three gentile names in 'Ælius Publius Julius' is perhaps possible at this late epoch; but, being a gross violation of Roman usage, suggests the probability that the signatures of three distinct persons have got confused. The error however, if error it be, does not affect the inference in the text.

The prevailing spirit not monarchical.

rapidly here than in other parts of Christendom. This supposition seems to overlook the fact that the influences which prevailed in the early church of the metropolis were more Greek than Roman¹, and that therefore the tendency would be rather towards individual liberty than towards compact and rigorous government. But indeed such presumptions, however attractive and specious, are valueless against the slightest evidence of facts. And the most trustworthy sources of information which we possess do not countenance the idea.

Bearing of Clement's
epistle.

The earliest authentic document bearing on the subject is the Epistle from the Romans to the Corinthians, probably written in the last decade of the first century. I have already considered the bearing of this letter on episcopacy in the Church of Corinth, and it is now time to ask what light it throws on this same institution at Rome. Now we cannot hesitate to accept the universal testimony of antiquity that it was written by Clement, the reputed bishop of Rome: and it is therefore the more surprising that, if he held this high office, the writer should not only not distinguish himself in any way from the rest of the church (as Polycarp does for instance), but that even his name should be suppressed. It is still more important to observe that, though he has occasion to speak of the ministry as an institution of the Apostles, he mentions only two orders and is silent about the episcopal office. Moreover he still uses the word 'bishop' in the older sense in which it occurs in the apostolic writings, as a synonyme for presbyter²; and it may be argued that the recognition of the episcopate as a higher and distinct office would oblige the adoption of a special name and therefore must have synchronized roughly with the separation of meaning between 'bishop' and 'presbyter.' Again, not many years after the date of Clement's letter, St Ignatius on his way to martyrdom writes to the Romans. Though this saint is the recognised champion of episcopacy, though the remaining six of the Ignatian letters all contain direct injunctions of obedience to bishops, in this epistle alone there is no allusion to the episcopal office as existing among his correspondents.

Testimony
of Ignatius

and Hermas.

The lapse of a few years carries us from the letters of Ignatius to the Shepherd of Hermas. And here the indications are equivocal. The angelic messenger directs Hermas to impart the revelation to the presbyters and also to make two copies, the one for Clement who shall communicate with the foreign churches (such being his duty), the other for Grapte who shall instruct the widows. Hermas himself is charged to 'read it to this city with the elders who preside over the church¹.' Elsewhere mention is made of the 'rulers' of the church². And again, in an enumeration of the faithful officers of the churches past and present, he speaks of the 'apostles and bishops and teachers and deacons³.' Here probably the word 'bishop' is used in its later sense, and the presbyters are designated by the term 'teachers.' Yet this interpretation cannot be regarded as certain, for the 'bishops and teachers' in Hermas, like the 'pastors and teachers' in St Paul, may possibly refer to the one presbyteral office in its twofold aspect. Other passages in which Hermas uses the same terms are indecisive. Thus he speaks of 'apostles and teachers who preached to the whole world and taught with reverence and purity the word of the Lord⁴'; of 'deacons who exercised their diaconate ill and plundered the life (τὴν ζωὴν) of widows and orphans⁵'; of 'hospitable bishops who at all times received the servants of God into their homes cheerfully and without hypocrisy,' 'who protected the bereaved and the widows in their ministrations without ceasing⁶.' From these passages it seems impossible to arrive at a safe conclusion respecting the ministry at the time when Hermas wrote. In other places he condemns the false prophet 'who seeming to have the Spirit exalts himself and would fain have the first seat⁷'; or he warns 'those who rule over the church and those who hold the chief-seat,' bidding them give up their dissensions and live at peace among themselves⁸; or he denounces those who have 'emulation one with another for the first place or for some honour⁹.' If we could accept the suggestion that in this last class of passages the writer condemns the ambition which Unwarranted

¹ See above, pp. 19, 20.

² See above, pp. 95, 96.

inference.

¹ Vis. ii. 4 γράψεις οὖν δύο βιβλιδάρια καὶ πέμψεις ἐν Κλήμεντι καὶ ἐν Γραπτῇ. πέμψει οὖν Κλήμης εἰς τὰς ἑξὼ πόλεις· ἐκεῖνῳ γὰρ ἐπιτέτραπται· Γραπτῇ δὲ νουθετήσει τὰς χήρας καὶ τοὺς ὀρφανούς· σὺ δὲ ἀναγνώσεις εἰς ταύτην τὴν πόλιν μετὰ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων τῶν προϊσταμένων τῆς ἐκκλησίας.

² Vis. ii. 2, iii. 9.

³ Vis. iii. 5.

⁴ Sim. ix. 25.

⁵ Sim. ix. 26.

⁶ Sim. ix. 27.

⁷ Mand. xi.

⁸ Vis. iii. 9 οὖν λέγω τοῖς προηγουμένοις τῆς ἐκκλησίας καὶ τοῖς πρωτοκαθεδρίταις, κ.τ.λ. The word πρωτοκαθεδρίτης seems to mean nothing more than 'occupant of the first seat' (comp. συνδιδασκαλίτης Ign. Eph. 3; compedagogita Orell. Inscr. 2818, 2819), and need not be ironical as Ritschl (p. 403) supposes.

⁹ Sim. viii. 7.

aimed at transforming the presbyterian into the episcopal form of government¹, we should have arrived at a solution of the difficulty: but the rebukes are couched in the most general terms and apply at least as well to the ambitious pursuit of existing offices as to the arrogant assertion of a hitherto unrecognized power². This clue failing us, the notices in the Shepherd are in themselves too vague to lead to any result. Were it not known that the writer's own brother was bishop of Rome, we should be at a loss what to say about the constitution of the Roman Church in his day³.

But while the testimony of these early writers appears at first sight and on the whole unfavourable to the existence of episcopacy in Rome, when they wrote, the impression needs to be corrected by im-

Testimony of Hegesip-
pus

portant considerations on the other side. Hegesippus, who visited Rome about the middle of the second century during the papacy of Anicetus, has left it on record that he drew up a list of the Roman bishops to his own time⁴. As the list is not preserved, we can only conjecture its contents; but if we may judge from the sentence immediately following in which he praises the orthodoxy of this and other churches under each succession, his object was probably to show that the teaching of the Apostles had been carefully preserved and handed down, and he would therefore trace the episcopal succession back to and of Ire-

næus.

apostolic times⁵. Such at all events is the aim and method of Irenæus who, writing somewhat later than Hegesippus and combating Gnostic heresies, appeals especially to the bishops of Rome, as depositaries of the apostolic tradition⁶. The list of Irenæus commences with Linus, whom he identifies with the person of this name mentioned by St Paul, and whom he states to have been 'entrusted with the office of the bishopric' by the Apostles. The second in succession is Anenctetus of whom he relates nothing, the third Clemens whom

Lists of Roman
bishops.

¹ So Ritschl pp. 403, 535.

² Comp. Matt. xxiii. 6, etc. When Irenæus wrote, episcopacy was certainly a venerable institution: yet his language closely resembles the reproachful expressions of Hermas: 'Contumeliis agunt reliquos et principalis consessionis (mss consessionis) tumore elati sunt' (iv. 26. 3).

³ See above, p. 166, note 8.

⁴ In Euseb. H. E. iv. 22.

⁵ The words of Hegesippus ἐν ἐκδότῃ

διαδοχῇ καὶ ἐν ἐκδότῃ πόλει κ.τ.λ. have a parallel in those of Irenæus (iii. 3. 3) τῇ αὐτῇ τάξει καὶ τῇ αὐτῇ διδοχῇ (Lat. 'hac ordinatione et successionē') ἥ τε ἀπὸ τῶν ἀποστόλων ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ παράδοσις καὶ τὸ τῆς ἀληθείας κήρυγμα κατήντηκεν εἰς ἡμᾶς. May not Irenæus have derived his information from the διαδοχῇ of Roman bishops which Hegesippus drew up? See below, p. 238.

⁶ Iren. iii. 3. 3.

he describes as a hearer of the Apostles and as writer of the letter to the Corinthians. The others in order are Evarestus, Alexander, Xystus, Telesphorus, Hyginus, Pius, Anicetus, Soter, and Eleutherus during whose episcopacy Irenæus writes. Eusebius in different works gives two lists, both agreeing in the order with Irenæus, though not according with each other in the dates. Catalogues are also found in later writers, transposing the sequence of the earliest bishops, and adding the name Cletus or substituting it for Anencletus¹. If these later catalogues deserve to be considered at all, the discrepancies may be explained by assuming two distinct churches in Rome—a Jewish and a Gentile community—in the first ages²; or they may have arisen from a confusion of the earlier and later senses of ἐπίσκοπος. With the many possibilities of error, no more Linus, A.D. 68. Anencletus, A.D. 80. Clement, A.D. 92. can safely be assumed of LINUS and ANENCLETUS than that they held some prominent position in the Roman Church. But the reason for supposing CLEMENT to have been a bishop is as strong as the universal tradition of the next ages can make it. Yet, while calling him a bishop, we must not suppose him to have attained the same distinct isolated position of authority which was occupied by his successors Eleutherus and Victor for instance at the close of the second century, or even by his contemporaries Ignatius of Antioch and Polycarp of Smyrna. He was rather the chief of the presbyters than the chief over the presbyters. Only when thus limited, can the episcopacy of St Clement be reconciled with the language of his own epistle or with the notice in his younger contemporary Hermas. At the same time the allusion in the Shepherd, though inconsistent with any exalted conception of his office, does assign to him as his special pro-

¹ On this subject see Pearson's 'Disertationes duæ de serie et successione primorum Romæ episcoporum' in his Minor Theological Works II. p. 296 sq. (ed. Churton). The Bucherian Catalogue evidently belongs to the age of Hippolytus and may have come from himself; but it has been so corrupted by omissions and transpositions, as to be almost valueless for the early bishops: see Mommsen Ueber den Chronographen vom Jahre 354, p. 583 sq., and compare Lipsius Quellenkritik des Epiphanius, p. 59. Recently another (undated) catalogue of the Roman bishops has been added to those already known (see Ancient Syriac Documents p. 71), but this is of no value. The omission of Clement's name in the Syriac list is doubtless due to the fact that the names Cletus, Clemens, begin with the same letters. In the margin I have for convenience given the dates of the Roman bishops from the Ecclesiastical History of Eusebius, without however attaching any weight to them in the case of the earlier names. See above p. 166.

² See Galatians p. 323.

vince the duty of communicating with foreign churches¹, which in the early ages was essentially the bishop's function, as may be seen by the instances of Polycarp, of Dionysius, of Irenæus, and of Polycrates. Of the two succeeding bishops, EVARESTUS and ALEXANDER, no authentic notices are preserved. XYSTUS, who follows, is the reputed author of a collection of proverbs, which a distinguished living critic has not hesitated to accept as genuine². He is also the earliest of those Roman prelates whom Irenæus, writing to Victor in the name of the Gallican Churches, mentions as having observed Easter after the western reckoning and yet maintained peace with those who kept it otherwise³. The next two, TELESOPHUS and HYGINUS, are described in the same terms. The former is likewise distinguished as the sole martyr among the early bishops of the metropolis⁴; the latter is mentioned as being in office when the peace of the Roman Church was disturbed by the presence of the heretics Valentinus and Cerdon⁵. With PIUS, the next in order, the office, if not the man, emerges into daylight. An anonymous writer, treating on the canon of Scripture, says that the Shepherd was written by Hermas 'quite lately while his brother Pius held the see of the Church of Rome⁶.' This passage, written by a contemporary, besides the testimony which it bears to the date and authorship of the Shepherd (with which we are not here concerned), is valuable in its bearing on this investigation; for the use of the 'chair' or 'see' as a recognised phrase points to a more or less prolonged existence of episcopacy in Rome, when this writer lived. To PIUS succeeds ANICETUS. And now Rome becomes for the moment the centre of interest and activity in the Christian world⁷. During this episcopate Hegesippus, visiting the metropolis for the purpose of ascertaining and recording the doctrines of the Roman Church, is welcomed by the bishop⁸. About the same time also another more illustrious visitor, Polycarp the venerable bishop of Smyrna, arrives in Rome to confer with the head of the Roman Church on the Paschal dispute⁹ and

¹ See above, p. 217, note 1.

² Ewald, Gesch. des V. I. vii. p. 321 sq. On the other hand see Zeller Philos. der Griechen iii. 1. p. 601 note, and Säger in the Jüdische Zeitschrift (1867) p. 29 sq. It has recently been edited by Gildemeister, Sexti Sententiæ, 1873.

³ Iren. in Euseb. H. E. v. 24.

⁴ Iren. iii. 3. 3.

⁵ Iren. iii. 4. 3.

⁶ See above, p. 166 note 8, where the passage is quoted.

⁷ See Westcott Canon p. 169, note 1.

⁸ Hegesipp. in Euseb. H. E. iv. 22.

⁹ Iren. in Euseb. H. E. v. 24.

there falls in with and denounces the heretic Marcion¹. These facts are stated on contemporary authority. Of SOTER also, the next in Soter, succession, a contemporary record is preserved. Dionysius of Corinth, A. D. 168. writing to the Romans, praises the zeal of their bishop, who in his fatherly care for the suffering poor and for the prisoners working in the mines had maintained and extended the hereditary fame of his church for zeal in all charitable and good works². In ELEUTHERUS, who succeeds Soter, we have the earliest recorded instance Eleutherus, rus, A. D. 177. of an archdeacon. When Hegesippus paid his visit to the metropolis, he found Eleutherus standing in this relation to the bishop Anicetus, and seems to have made his acquaintance while acting in this capacity³. Eleutherus however was a contemporary, not only of Hegesippus, but also of the great writers Irenæus and Tertullian⁴, who speak of the episcopal succession in the churches generally, and in Rome especially, as the best safeguard for the transmission of the true faith from apostolic times⁵. With VICTOR, the successor of Victor, A. D. 189. Eleutherus, a new era begins. Apparently the first Latin prelate who held the metropolitan see of Latin Christendom⁶, he was moreover the first Roman bishop who is known to have had intimate relations with the imperial court⁷, and the first also who advanced those claims to universal dominion which his successors in later ages have always consistently and often successfully maintained⁸. 'I

¹ Iren. iii. 3. 4, comp. iii. 4. 4.

² In Euseb. H. E. iv. 23.

³ In Euseb. H. E. iv. 22 μέχρῃς Ἀνικηίου οὗ διάκονος ἦν Ἐλεούθερος.

⁴ He is mentioned by Irenæus iii. 3. 3 νῦν δωδεκάτῳ τόπῳ τὸν τῆς ἐπισκοπῆς ἀπὸ τῶν ἀποστόλων κατέχει κλήρον Ἐλεούθερος, and by Tertullian, de Præscr. 30 'sub episcopatu Eleutheri benedicti.'

⁵ Iren. iii. 3. 2, Tertull. de Præscr. 32, 36, adv. Marc. iv. 5.

⁶ All the predecessors of Victor bear Greek names with two exceptions, Clements and Pius; and even these appear not to have been Latin. Clement writes in Greek, and his style is wholly unlike what might be expected from a Roman. Hermas, the brother of Pius, not only employs the Greek language in writing, but bears a Greek name also. It is worth observing also that Tertullian (de Præscr. 30), speaking of the episcopate of Eleutherus, designates the church of the metropolis not 'Ecclesia Romana,' but 'Ecclesia Romanensis,' i.e. not the Church of Rome, but the Church in Rome. The transition from a Greek to a Latin Church was of course gradual; but, if a definite epoch must be named, the episcopate of Victor serves better than any other. The two immediate successors of Victor, Zephyrinus (202—219) and Callistus (219—223), bear Greek names, and it may be inferred from the account in Hippolytus that they were Greeks; but from this time forward the Roman bishops, with scarcely an exception, seem to have been Latins.

⁷ Hippol. Hær. ix. 12, pp. 287, 288.

⁸ See the account of his attitude in the Paschal controversy, Euseb. H. E. v. 24.

hear,' writes Tertullian scornfully, 'that an edict has gone forth, aye and that a peremptory edict: the chief pontiff, forsooth, I mean the bishop of bishops, has issued his commands¹.' At the end of the first century the Roman Church was swayed by the mild and peaceful counsels of the presbyter-bishop Clement; the close of the second witnessed the autocratic pretensions of the haughty pope Victor, the prototype of a Hildebrand or an Innocent.

GAUL.

9. The Churches of GAUL were closely connected with and probably descended from the Churches of Asia Minor. If so, the episcopal form of government would probably be coeval with the foundation of Christian brotherhoods in this country. It is true we do not meet with any earlier bishop than the immediate predecessor of Irenæus at Lyons, the aged Pothinus, of whose martyrdom an account is given in the letter of the Gallican Churches². But this is also the first distinct historical notice of any kind relating to Christianity in Gaul.

AFRICA.

10. AFRICA again was evangelized from Rome at a comparatively late date. Of the African Church before the close of the second century, when a flood of light is suddenly thrown upon it by the writings of Tertullian, we know absolutely nothing. But we need not doubt that this father represents the traditions and sentiments of his church, when he lays stress on episcopacy as an apostolic institution and on the episcopate as the depositary of pure Christian doctrine. If we may judge by the large number of prelates assembled in the African councils of a later generation, it would appear that the extension of the episcopate was far more rapid here than in most parts of Christendom³.

¹ Tertull. de Pudic. 1. The bishop here mentioned will be either Victor or Zephyrinus; and the passage points to the assumption of extraordinary titles by the Roman bishops about this time. See also Cyprian in the opening of the Concil. Carth. p. 158 (ed. Fell) 'Neque enim quisquam nostrum episcopum se episcoporum constituit etc.' doubtless in allusion to the arrogance of the Roman prelates.

² The Epistle of the Gallican Churches in Euseb. H. E. v. 1.

³ At the African council convoked by

Cyprian about 50 years later, the opinions of as many as 87 bishops are recorded; and allusion is made in one of his letters (Epist. 59) to a council held before his time, when 90 bishops assembled. For a list of the African bishoprics at this time see Münter Primord. Eccl. Afric. p. 31 sq. The enormous number of African bishops a few centuries later would seem incredible, were it not reported on the best authority. Dupin (Optat. Milev. p. lix) counts up as many as 690 African sees: compare also the Notitia in Ruinart's Victor Vi-

II. The church of ALEXANDRIA, on the other hand, was probably founded in apostolic times¹. Nor is there any reason to doubt the tradition which connects it with the name of St Mark, though the authorities for the statement are comparatively recent. Nevertheless of its early history we have no authentic record. Eusebius indeed gives a list of bishops beginning with St Mark, which here, as in the case of the Roman see, is accompanied by dates²; but from what source he derived his information, is unknown. The first contemporary notice of church officers in Alexandria is found in a heathen writer. The emperor Hadrian, writing to the consul Servianus, thus describes the state of religion in this city: 'I have become perfectly familiar with Egypt, which you praised to me; it is fickle, uncertain, blown about by every gust of rumour. Those who worship Serapis are Christians, and those are devoted to Serapis who call themselves bishops of Christ. There is no ruler of a synagogue there, no Samaritan, no Christian presbyter, who is not an astrologer, a soothsayer, a quack. The patriarch himself whenever he comes to Egypt is compelled by some to worship Serapis, by others to worship Christ³. In this letter, which seems to have been written in the

ALEXAN-

DRIA.

Hadrian's
letter.

tensis p. 117 sq. with the notes, p. 215 sq. These last references I owe to Gibbon, c. xxxvii. and c. xli.

¹ Independently of the tradition relating to St Mark, this may be inferred from extant canonical and uncanonical writings which appear to have emanated from Alexandria. The Epistle to the Hebrews, even if we may not ascribe it to the learned Alexandrian Apollos (Acts xviii. 24), at least bears obvious marks of Alexandrian culture. The so-called Epistle of Barnabas again, which may have been written as early as the reign of Vespasian and can hardly date later than Nerva, must be referred to the Alexandrian school of theology.

² Euseb. H. E. ii. 24, iii. 14, etc. See Clinton's Fasti Romani ii. p. 544.

³ Preserved in Vopiscus Vit. Saturn.

8. The Jewish patriarch (who resided at Tiberias) is doubtless intended; for it would be no hardship to the Christian bishop of Alexandria to be 'compelled to worship Christ.' Otherwise the anachronism involved in such a title would alone have sufficed to condemn the letter as spurious. Yet Salmasius, Casaubon, and the older commentators generally, agree in the supposition that the bishop of Alexandria is styled patriarch here. The manner in which the document is stated by Vopiscus to have been preserved ('Hadriani epistolam ex libris Phlegontis liberti ejus proditam') is favourable to its genuineness; nor does the mention of Verus as the emperor's 'son' in another part of the letter present any real chronological difficulty. Hadrian paid his visit to Egypt in the autumn of 130, but the letter is not stated to have been written there. The date of the third consulship of Servianus is A.D. 134, and the account of Spartianus (Ver. 3) easily admits of the adoption of Verus before or during this year, though Clinton (Fast. Rom. i. p. 124) places it as late as A.D. 135. Gregorovius (Kaiser Hadrian p. 71) suggests that 'filium meum' may have been added by Phlegon or by some one else. The prominence of the year 134, Hadrian shows more knowledge of Jewish ecclesiastical polity than of Christian: but, apparently without knowing the exact value of terms, he seems to distinguish the bishop and the presbyter in the Christian community¹. From the age of Hadrian to the age of Clement no contemporary or nearly contemporary notices are found, bearing on the government of the Alexandrian Church. The language of Clement is significant; he speaks sometimes of two orders of the ministry, the presbyters and deacons²; sometimes of three, the bishops, presbyters, and deacons³. Thus it would appear that even as late as the close of the second century the bishop of Alexandria was regarded as distinct and yet not distinct from the presbytery⁴. And the language of Clement is further illustrated by the fact, which will have to be considered at length presently, that at Alexandria the bishop was nominated and apparently ordained by the twelve presbyters out of their own number⁵. The episcopal office in this Church during the second century gives no presage of the world-wide influence to which under the prouder name of patriarchate it was destined in later ages to attain. The Alexandrian succession, in which history is hitherto most interested, is not the succession of the bishops but of the heads of the catechetical school. The first bishop of Alexandria, of whom any distinct incident is recorded on trustworthy authority, was a contemporary of Origen.

Inferences. The notices thus collected⁶ present a large body of evidence Christians in this letter is not surprising, when we remember how Hadrian interested himself in their tenets on another occasion (at Athens). This document is considered genuine by such opposite authorities as Tillemont (Hist. des Emp. ii. p. 265) and Gregorovius (l. c. p. 41), and may be accepted without hesitation.

¹ At this time there appears to have been only one bishop in Egypt (see below, p. 230). But Hadrian, who would have heard of numerous bishops elsewhere, and perhaps had no very precise knowledge of the Egyptian Church, might well indulge in this rhetorical flourish. At all events he seems to mean different offices, when speaking of the bishop and the presbyter.

² Strom. vii. 1 (p. 830, Potter) ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ κατὰ τὴν ἐκκλησίαν, τὴν μὲν βελτιωτικὴν οἱ πρεσβύτεροι σώζουσιν εἰκόνα, τὴν ὑπηρετικὴν δὲ οἱ διάκονοι.

³ Strom. vi. 13 (p. 793) αἱ ἐνταῦθα κατὰ τὴν ἐκκλησίαν προκοπαί, ἐπισκόπων, πρεσβυτέρων, διακόνων, μυχήματα οἶμαι ἀγγελικῆς δόξης, Strom. iii. 12 (p. 552), Pæd. iii. 12 (see the next note): see Kaye's Clement of Alexandria p. 463 sq.

⁴ Yet in one passage he, like Irenæus (see above p. 96), betrays his ignorance that in the language of the New Testament bishop and presbyter are synonyms; see Pæd. iii. 12 (p. 309) μυρίαὶ δὲ ὄσαι ὑποθήκαι εἰς πρόσωπα ἐκλεκτὰ διατείνονται ἐγγεγράφата ταῖς βίβλοις ταῖς ἁγίαις, αἱ μὲν πρεσβυτέροις αἱ δὲ ἐπισκόποις αἱ δὲ διακόνοις, ἄλλαι χήραις κ.τ.λ.

⁵ See below, p. 229.

⁶ In this sketch of the episcopate in establishing the fact of the early and extensive adoption of episcopacy in the Christian Church. The investigation however would not be complete, unless attention were called to such indirect testimony as is furnished by the tacit assumptions of writers living towards and at the close of the second century. Episcopacy is so inseparably interwoven with all the traditions and beliefs of men like Irenæus and Tertullian, that they betray no knowledge of a time when it was not. Even Irenæus, the earlier of these, who was certainly born and probably had grown up before the middle of the century, seems to be wholly ignorant that the word bishop had passed from a lower to a higher value since the apostolic times¹. Nor is it important only to observe the positive though indirect testimony which they afford. Their silence suggests a strong negative presumption, that while every other point of doctrine or practice was eagerly canvassed, the form of Church government alone scarcely came under discussion.

But these notices, besides establishing the general prevalence of episcopacy, also throw considerable light on its origin. They indicate that the solution suggested by the history of the word 'bishop' and its transference from the lower to the higher office is the true solution, and that the episcopate was created out of the presbytery. They show that this creation was not so much an isolated act as a progressive development, not advancing everywhere at an uniform rate but exhibiting at one and the same time different stages of growth in different churches. They seem to hint also that, so far as this development was affected at all by national temper and characteristics, it was slower where the prevailing influences were more purely Greek, as at Corinth and Philippi and Rome, and more rapid where an oriental spirit predominated, as at Jerusalem and Antioch and Ephesus. Above all, they establish this result clearly, that its maturer forms are seen first in those regions where the latest surviving Apostles (more especially St John) fixed their abode, and at a

The general prevalence of episcopacy.

Gradual and uneven development of the office.

the different churches I have not thought it necessary to carry the lists later than the second century. Nor (except in a very few cases) has any testimony been accepted, unless the writer himself flourished before the close of this century. The Apostolic Constitutions would add several names to the list, but this evidence is not trustworthy, though in many cases the statements doubtless rested on some traditional basis.

¹ See above, p. 96. The same is true of Clement of Alexandria: see p. 224 note 4.

time when its prevalence cannot be dissociated from their influence or their sanction.

Original relation of the two offices not forgotten.

The original relation of the bishop to the presbyter, which this investigation reveals, was not forgotten even after the lapse of centuries. Though set over the presbyters, he was still regarded as in some sense one of them. Irenæus indicates this position of the episcopate very clearly. In his language a presbyter is never designated a bishop, while on the other hand he very frequently speaks

A bishop still called a presbyter by Ire-
næus

of a bishop as a presbyter. In other words, though he views the episcopate as a distinct office from the presbytery, he does not regard it as a distinct order in the same sense in which the diaconate is a distinct order. Thus, arguing against the heretics he says, 'But when again we appeal against them to that tradition which is derived from the Apostles, which is preserved in the churches by successions of presbyters, they place themselves in opposition to it, saying that they, being wiser not only than the presbyters but even than the Apostles, have discovered the genuine truth¹.' Yet just below, after again mentioning the apostolic tradition, he adds, 'We are able to enumerate those who have been appointed by the Apostles bishops in the churches and their successors down to our own time²'; and still further, after saying that it would take up too much space if he were to trace the succession in all the churches, he declares that he will confound his opponents by singling out the ancient and renowned Church of Rome founded by the Apostles Peter and Paul and will point out the tradition handed down to his own time 'by the succession of bishops,' after which he gives a list from Linus to Eleutherus³. So again in another passage he writes, 'Therefore obedience ought to be rendered to the presbyters who are in the churches, who have the succession from the Apostles as we have shown, who with the succession of the episcopate have also received the sure grace of truth according to the pleasure of the Father'; after which he mentions some 'who are believed by many to be presbyters, but serve their own lusts and are elated with the pomp of the chief seat,' and bids his readers shun these and seek such as 'together with the rank of the presbytery show their speech sound and their conversation void of offence,' adding of these latter, 'Such presbyters the Church nurtures and rears, concerning whom also the prophet saith, "I will give thy rulers in peace and thy bishops in righteousness¹". Thus also writing to Victor of Rome in the name of the Gallican churches, he says, 'It was not so observed by the presbyters before Soter, who ruled the Church which thou now guidest, we mean Anicetus and Pius, Hyginus and Telesphorus and Xystus².' And the same estimate of the office appears in Clement of Alexandria: for, while he speaks elsewhere of the three offices in the ministry, mentioning them by name, he in one passage puts forward a twofold division, the presbyters whose duty it is to improve, and the deacons whose duty it is to serve, the Church³. The functions of the bishop and presbyter are thus regarded as substantially the same in kind, though different in degree, while the functions of the diaconate are separate from both. More than a century and a half later, this view is put forward with the greatest distinctness by the most learned and the most illustrious of the Latin fathers. 'There is one ordination,' writes the commentator Hilary, 'of the bishop and the presbyter; for either is a priest, but the bishop is first. Every bishop is a presbyter, but every presbyter is not a bishop: for he is bishop who is first among the *presbyters*⁴.' The language of St Jerome to the same effect has been quoted above⁵. To the passages there given may be added the following: 'This has been said to show that with the ancients presbyters were the same as bishops: but gradually all the responsibility was deferred to a single person, that the thickets of heresies might be rooted out. Therefore, as presbyters know that by the custom of the Church they are subject to him who shall have been set over them, and Clement of Alexandria.

¹ Iren. iii. 2. 2.

² Iren. iii. 3. 1.

³ Iren. iii. 3. 2, 3.

Testimony of Ambrosiaster,

Jerome,

¹ Iren. iv. 26. 2, 3, 4, 5.

² In Euseb. H. E. v. 24. In other places Irenæus apparently uses πρεσβύτεροι to denote antiquity and not office, as in the letter to Florinus, Euseb. H. E. v. 20 οἱ πρὸ ἡμῶν πρεσβύτεροι οἱ καὶ τοῖς ἀποστόλοις συμφοιτήσαντες (comp. ii. 22. 5); in which sense the word occurs also in Papias (Euseb. H. E. iii. 39); but the passages quoted in the text are decisive, nor is there any reason (as Rothe assumes, p. 414 sq.) why the usage of Irenæus should be uniform.

³ See the passage quoted above, p. 224, note 2. So also in the anecdote of St John (Quis div. salv. 42, p. 959) we read τῷ καθεστῶτι προσβλέψας ἐπισκόπῳ, but immediately afterwards ὁ δὲ πρεσβύτερος ἀναλαβὼν κ.τ.λ., and then again ἄγε δὴ, ἔφη, ὧ ἐπίσκοπε, of the same person. Thus he too, like Irenæus, regards the bishop as a presbyter, though the converse would not be true.

⁴ Ambrosiaster, on 1 Tim. iii. 10.

⁵ See p. 96.

and Augustine.

Bishops styled themselves fellow-presbyters.

The bishop of Alexandria chosen and created by the presbytery.

so let bishops also be aware that they are superior to presbyters more owing to custom than to any actual ordinance of the Lord, etc.: Let us see therefore what sort of person ought to be ordained presbyter or bishop¹. In the same spirit too the great Augustine writing to Jerome says, 'Although according to titles of honour which the practice of the Church has now made valid, the episcopate is greater than the presbytery, yet in many things Augustine is less than Jerome².' To these fathers this view seemed to be an obvious deduction from the identity of the terms 'bishop' and 'presbyter' in the apostolic writings; nor indeed, when they wrote, had usage entirely effaced the original connexion between the two offices. Even in the fourth and fifth centuries, when the independence and power of the episcopate had reached its maximum, it was still customary for a bishop in writing to a presbyter to address him as 'fellow-presbyter³,' thus bearing testimony to a substantial identity of order. Nor does it appear that this view was ever questioned until the era of the Reformation. In the western Church at all events it carried the sanction of the highest ecclesiastical authorities and was maintained even by popes and councils⁴.

Nor was it only in the language of the later Church that the memory of this fact was preserved. Even in her practice indications might here and there be traced, which pointed to a time when the bishop was still only the chief member of the presbytery. The case of the Alexandrian Church, which has already been mentioned casually, deserves special notice. St Jerome, after denouncing the audacity of certain persons who 'would give to deacons the precedence over presbyters, that is over bishops,' and alleging scriptural proofs of the identity of the two, gives the following fact in illus-

¹ On Tit. i. 5 (vii. p. 696).

² Epist. lxxii. 33 (ii. p. 202, ed. Ben.).

³ So for instance Cyprian, Epist. 14, writes 'compresbyteri nostri Donatus et Fortunatus'; and addressing Cornelius bishop of Rome (Epist. 45) he says 'cum ad me talia de te et compresbyteris tecum consentibus scripta venissent.' Compare also Epist. 44, 45, 71, 76. Augustine writes to Jerome in the same terms, and in fact this seems to have been the recognised form of address. See the Quæst. Vet. et Nov. Test. ci (in Augustin. Op. iii. P. 2, p. 93) 'Quid est enim episcopus nisi primus presbyter, hoc est summus sacerdos? Denique non aliter quam compresbyteros hic vocat et consacerdotes suos. Numquid et ministros condiaconos suos dicit episcopus?', where the writer is arguing against the arrogance of the Roman deacons. See above, p. 94.

⁴ See the references collected by Gieseler i. p. 105 sq.

tration: 'At Alexandria, from Mark the Evangelist down to the times of the bishops Heraclas (A.D. 233—249) and Dionysius (A.D. 249—265), the presbyters always nominated as bishop one chosen out of their own body and placed in a higher grade: just as if an army were to appoint a general, or deacons were to choose from their own body one whom they knew to be diligent and call him archdeacon'.¹ Though the direct statement of this father refers only to the appointment of the bishop, still it may be inferred that the function of the presbyters extended also to the consecration. And this inference is borne out by other evidence. 'In Egypt,' writes an older contemporary of St Jerome, the commentator Hilary, 'the presbyters seal (i.e. ordain or consecrate), if the bishop be not present'.² This however might refer only to the ordination of presbyters, and not to the consecration of a bishop. But even the latter is supported by direct evidence, which though comparatively late deserves consideration, inasmuch as it comes from one who was himself a patriarch of Alexandria. Eutychius, who held the patriarchal see from A.D. 933 to A.D. 940, writes as follows: 'The Evangelist Mark appointed along with the patriarch Hananias twelve presbyters who should remain with the patriarch, to the end that, when the patriarchate was vacant, they might choose one of the twelve presbyters, on whose head the remaining eleven laying their hands should bless him and create him patriarch.' The vacant place in the presbytery was then to be filled up, that the number twelve might be constant'.³ 'This custom,' adds this writer, 'did not cease till the time of Alexander (A.D. 313—326), patriarch of Alexandria. He however forbade that henceforth the presbyters should create the patriarch, and decreed that on the death of the patriarch the bishops should meet to ordain the (new) patriarch, etc.'⁴ It is clear from this

Testimony
of Euty-chius.

¹ Epist. cxlvi ad Evang. (i. p. 1082).

² Ambrosiast. on Ephes. iv. 12. So too in the Quæst. Vet. et Nov. Test. ci (falsely ascribed to St Augustine), August. Op. iii. P. 2, p. 93, 'Nam in Alexandria et per totam Ægyptum, si desit episcopus, consecrat (v. l. consignat) presbyter.'

³ Eutychii Patr. Alexandr. Annales i. p. 331 (Pococke, Oxon. 1656). The inferences in the text are resisted by Abraham Ecchellensis Eutychius vind- catus p. 22 sq. (in answer to Selden the translator of Eutychius) and by LeQuien Oriens Christianus ii. p. 342, who urge all that can be said on the opposite side. The authority of a writer so inaccurate as Eutychius, if it had been unsupported, would have had no great weight; but, as we have seen, this is not the case.

⁴ Between Dionysius and Alexander four bishops of Alexandria intervened, Maximus (A.D. 265), Theonas (A.D. 283), Peter I (A.D. 301), and Achilles (A.D.

passage that Eutychius considered the functions of nomination and ordination to rest with the same persons.

Increase
of the Egyptian
episco-pate.

If this view however be correct, the practice of the Alexandrian Church was exceptional; for at this time the formal act of the bishop was considered generally necessary to give validity to ordination. Nor is the exception difficult to account for. At the close of the second century, when every considerable church in Europe and Asia appears to have had its bishop, the only representative of the episcopal order in Egypt was the bishop of Alexandria. It was Demetrius first (A.D. 190—233), as Eutychius informs us¹, who appointed three other bishops, to which number his successor Heraclas (A.D. 233—249) added twenty more. This extension of episcopacy to the provincial towns of Egypt paved the way for a change in the mode of appointing and ordaining the patriarch of Alexandria. But before this time it was a matter of convenience and almost of necessity that the Alexandrian presbyters should themselves ordain their chief.

Decree of the Council of An-cyræ.

Nor is it only in Alexandria that we meet with this peculiarity. Where the same urgent reason existed, the same exceptional practice seems to have been tolerated. A decree of the Council of Ancyra (A.D. 314) ordains that 'it be not allowed to country-bishops (χωρεπισκόποις) to ordain presbyters or deacons, nor even to city-presbyters, except permission be given in each parish by the bishop in writing².' Thus while restraining the existing license, the framers 312). It will therefore be seen that there is a considerable discrepancy between the accounts of Jerome and Eutychius as to the time when the change was effected. But we may reasonably conjecture (with Ritschl, p. 432) that the transition from the old state of things to the new would be the result of a prolonged conflict between the Alexandrian presbytery who had hitherto held these functions, and the bishops of the recently created Egyptian sees to whom it was proposed to transfer them.

Somewhat later one Ischyra was deprived of his orders by an Alexandrian synod, because he had been ordained by a presbyter only: Athan. Apol. c. Arian. 75 (i. p. 152). From this time at all events the Alexandrian

Church insisted as strictly as any other on episcopal ordination.

¹ Eutych. Ann. l. c. p. 332. Heraclas, we are informed on the same authority (p. 335), was the first Alexandrian prelate who bore the title of patriarch; this designation being equivalent to metropolitan or bishop of bishops.

² Concil. Ancyra. can. 13 (Routh Rel. Sacra. iv. p. 121) χωρεπισκόποις μὴ ἐξεῖναι πρεσβυτέρους ἢ διακόνους χειροτονεῖν, ἀλλὰ [μὴν] μηδὲ πρεσβυτέροις πῶλεως χωρὶς τοῦ ἐπιτραπῆναι ὑπὸ τοῦ ἐπισκόπου μετὰ γραμμάτων ἐν ἐκάστῃ παροικίᾳ. The various readings and interpretations of this canon will be found in Routh's note, p. 144 sq. Routh himself reads ἀλλὰ μὴν μηδὲ πρεσβυτέρους of the decree still allow very considerable latitude. And it is especially important to observe that they lay more stress on episcopal sanction than on episcopal ordination. Provided that the former is secured, they are content to dispense with the latter.

As a general rule however, even those writers who maintain a substantial identity in the offices of the bishop and presbyter reserve the power of ordaining to the former¹. This distinction in fact may be regarded as a settled maxim of Church polity in the fourth and later centuries. And when Acrius maintained the equality of the bishop and presbyter and denied the necessity of episcopal ordination, his opinion was condemned as heretical, and is stigmatized as 'frantic' by Epiphanius².

πόλεως, making πρεσβυτέρους πόλεως the object of χειροτονεῖν, but to this there is a twofold objection: (1) he necessarily understands the former πρεσβυτέρους to mean πρεσβυτέρους χώρας, though this is not expressed: (2) he interprets ἀλλὰ μὴν μὴδὲ 'much less,' a sense which μὴδὲ seems to exclude and which is not borne out by his examples.

The name and office of the χωρεπίσκοπος appear to be reliques of the time when ἐπίσκοπος and πρεσβύτερος were synonymes. While the large cities had their college of presbyters, for the villages a single πρεσβύτερος (or ἐπίσκοπος) would suffice; but from his isolated position he would be tempted, even if he were not obliged, to perform on his own responsibility certain acts which in the city would only be performed by the bishop properly so called, or at least would not be performed without his consent. Out of this position the office of the later χωρεπίσκοπος would gradually be developed; but the rate of progression would not be uniform, and the regulations affecting it would be determined by the circumstances of the particular locality. Hence, at a later date, it seems in some places to have been presbyteral, in others episcopal. In the Ancyran canon just quoted a chorepiscopus is evidently placed below the city presbytery; but in other notices he occupies a higher position. For the conflicting accounts of the χωρεπίσκοπος see Bingham II. xiv.

Baur's account of the origin of the episcopate supposes that each Christian congregation was presided over not by a college of presbyters, but by a single πρεσβύτερος or ἐπίσκοπος, i.e. that the constitution of the Church was from the first monarchical: see Pastoralbriefe p. 81 sq., Ursprung des Episcopats p. 84 sq. This view is inconsistent alike with the analogy of the synagogue and with the notices in the apostolic and early ecclesiastical writings. But the practice, which he considers to have been the general rule, would probably hold in small country congregations, where a college of presbyters would be unnecessary as well as impossible.

¹ St Jerome himself (Epist. cxlvi), in the context of the passage in which he maintains the identity of the two orders and alleges the tradition of the Alexandrian Church (see above, p. 229), adds, 'Quid enim facit excepta ordinatione episcopus quod presbyter non faciat?' So also Const. Apost. viii. 28 ἐπίσκοπος χειροθετεῖ χειροτονεῖ... πρεσβύτερος χειροθετεῖ οὐ χειροτονεῖ, Chrysost. Hom. xi on 1 Tim. iii. 8 τῇ χειροτονίᾳ μὴν ὑπερβεβήκασι καὶ τούτῳ μόνον δοκοῦσι πλεονεκτεῖν πρεσβυτέρους. See Bingham II. iii. 5, 6, 7, for other references.

² Hæres. lxxv. 3; comp. Augustine Hæres. § 53. See Wordsworth Theoph. Angl. c. x.

Causes of the development
of episcopacy.

It has been seen that the institution of an episcopate must be placed as far back as the closing years of the first century, and that it cannot, without violence to historical testimony, be dis severed from the name of St John. But it has been seen also that the earliest bishops did not hold the same independent position of supremacy which was and is occupied by their later representatives. It will therefore be instructive to trace the successive stages by which the power of the office was developed during the second and third centuries. Though something must be attributed to the frailty of human pride and love of power, it will nevertheless appear that the pressing needs of the Church were mainly instrumental in bringing about the result, and that this development of the episcopal office was a providential safeguard amid the confusion of speculative opinion, the distracting effects of persecution, and the growing anarchy of social life, which threatened not only the extension but the very existence of the Church of Christ. Ambition of office in a society where prominence of rank involved prominence of risk was at least no vulgar and selfish passion.

Three names connected with its progress.

This development will be conveniently connected with three great names, each separated from the other by an interval of more than half a century, and each marking a distinct stage in its progress. Ignatius, Irenæus, and Cyprian, represent three successive advances towards the supremacy which was ultimately attained.

I. IGNA-TIUS.

I. IGNATIUS of Antioch is commonly recognized as the staunchest advocate of episcopacy in the early ages. Though the strength and prevalence of this view is doubtless due in great measure to the forged and interpolated epistles bearing his name, it is nevertheless sufficiently justified by his authentic letters¹. Nor indeed would a falsifier have adopted his mask, unless the genuine writings or traditional opinions of this early martyr had given countenance to the forgery. To St Ignatius the chief value of episcopacy lies in this, landes, 1859) than by any other writer. At the same time, I agree with Lipsius that the epistles of the short Greek recension cannot date later than the middle of the second century; and if so, they will still hold their place among the most important of early Christian documents.

¹ Throughout this dissertation it is assumed that the Syriac version represents the epistles of St Ignatius in their original form. The reasons for this view are given better by R. A. Lipsius (Ueber die Aechtheit, etc. in Niedner's Zeitschrift i. p. 3 sq., 1856, and Ueber das Verhältniss des Textes etc. in the Abhandlungen für die Kunde des Morgen-

that it constitutes a visible centre of unity in the congregation. He seems in the development of the office to keep in view the same purpose, which we may suppose to have influenced the last surviving Apostles in its institution. The withdrawal of the authoritative preachers of the Gospel, the personal disciples of the Lord, had severed one bond of union. The destruction of the original abode of Christendom, the scene of the life and passion of the Saviour and of the earliest triumphs of the Church, had removed another. Thus deprived at once of the personal and the local ties which had hitherto bound individual to individual and church to church, the Christian brotherhood was threatened with schism, disunion, dissolution. 'Vindicate thine office with all diligence,' writes Ignatius to the bishop of Smyrna, 'in things temporal as well as spiritual. Have a care of unity, than which nothing is better'. 'The crisis requires thee, as the pilot requires the winds or the storm-tossed mariner a haven, so as to attain unto God².' 'Let not those who seem to be plausible and teach falsehoods dismay thee; but stand thou firm as an anvil under the hammer: 'tis the part of a great athlete to be bruised and to conquer³.' 'Let nothing be done without thy consent, and do thou nothing without the consent of God⁴.' He adds directions also, that those who decide on a life of virginity shall disclose their intention to the bishop only, and those who marry shall obtain his consent to their union, that 'their marriage may be according to the Lord and not according to lust⁵.' And turning from the bishop to the people he adds, 'Give heed to your bishop, that God also may give heed to you. I give my life for those who are obedient to the bishop, to presbyters, to deacons. With them may I have my portion in the presence of God⁶.' Writing to the Ephesians also he says that in receiving their bishop Onesimus he is receiving their whole body, and he charges them to love him, and one and all to be in his likeness⁷, adding, 'Since love does not permit me to be silent, therefore I have been forward in exhorting you to conform to the will of God⁸.'

From these passages it will be seen that St Ignatius values the episcopate chiefly as a security for good discipline and harmonious

¹ Polyc. 1.

² Polyc. 2.

³ Polyc. 3.

⁴ Polyc. 4.

⁵ Polyc. 5.

⁶ Polyc. 6.

⁷ Ephes. 1.

⁸ Ephes. 3.

The bishop regarded as a centre of unity.

The Ignatian writer takes the same view. working in the Church. And the writer, who before or about the middle of the second century forges and interpolates the Ignatian letters, follows in the track of the saint whose name he assumes :

while at the same time he lays greater stress on the divine authority of the institution. When this unknown person wrote, the heresies faintly discerned by the genuine Ignatius had grown rampant and the purity of Christian teaching was seriously endangered. Yet he denounces these heresies rather as a breach of unity than as a falsification of doctrine. Though perhaps more nearly a contemporary of Irenæus than of Ignatius, he has not yet exchanged the standing-point of the earlier father for that of the latter. But while he maintains the same aspect of episcopacy with the true Ignatius, he uses extravagant language which has no parallel in the genuine letters of the saint. Throughout the whole range of Christian literature, no more uncompromising advocate of episcopacy can be found. His advocacy indeed is extended to the two lower orders of the ministry¹, more especially to the presbyters². But it is when asserting the claims of the episcopal office to obedience and respect, that his language is strained to the utmost. 'The bishops established in the farthest parts of the world are in the counsels of Jesus Christ³.' 'Every one whom the Master of the house sendeth to govern His own household we ought to receive, as Him that sent him ; clearly therefore we ought to regard the bishop as the Lord Himself⁴.' Those 'live a life after Christ,' who 'obey the bishop as Jesus Christ⁵.' 'It is good to know God and the bishop ; he that honoureth the bishop is honoured of God ; he that doeth anything without the knowledge of the bishop serveth the devil⁶.' He that obeys his bishop, obeys 'not him, but the Father of Jesus Christ, the bishop of all.' On the other hand, he that practises hypocrisy towards his bishop, 'not only deceiveth the visible one, but cheateth the Unseen⁷.' 'As many as are of God and of Jesus Christ, are with the bishop⁸.' Those are approved who are 'inseparate from God, from Jesus Christ, and from the bishop, and from the ordinances of the Apostles⁹.' 'Do ye all,' says this writer again, 'follow the bishop, as Jesus Christ followed the

His extravagant exaltation of the episcopate.

¹ Magn. 13, Trall. 3, 7, Philad. 4, 7, Smyrn. 8, 12.

² Ephes. 2, 20, Magn. 2, 6, Trall. 13.

³ Ephes. 3.

⁴ Ephes. 6.

⁶ Trall. 2.

⁶ Smyrn. 9.

⁷ Magn. 3.

⁸ Philad. 3.

⁹ Trall. 7.

Father¹. The Ephesians are commended accordingly, because they are so united with their bishop 'as the Church with Jesus Christ and as Jesus Christ with the Father.' 'If,' it is added, 'the prayer of one or two hath so much power, how much more the prayer of the bishop and of the whole Church².' 'Wherever the bishop may appear, there let the multitude be, just as where Jesus Christ may be, there is the Catholic Church³.' Therefore 'let no man do anything pertaining to the Church without the bishop⁴.' 'It is not allowable either to baptize or to hold a love-feast without the bishop: but whatsoever he may approve, this also is well pleasing to God, that everything which is done may be safe and valid⁵.' 'Unity of God,' according to this writer, consists in harmonious co-operation with the bishop⁶.

And yet with all this extravagant exaltation of the episcopal office, the presbyters are not put out of sight. They form a council⁷, a 'worthy spiritual coronal⁸' round the bishop. It is the duty of every individual, but especially of them, 'to refresh the bishop unto the honour of the Father and of Jesus Christ and of the Apostles⁹.' They stand in the same relation to him, 'as the chords to the lyre¹⁰.' If the bishop occupies the place of God or of Jesus Christ, the presbyters are as the Apostles, as the council of God¹¹. If obedience is due to the bishop as the grace of God, it is due to the presbytery as the law of Jesus Christ¹².

The presbytery however not forgotten.

It need hardly be remarked how subversive of the true spirit of Christianity, in the negation of individual freedom and the consequent suppression of direct responsibility to God in Christ, is the crushing despotism with which this writer's language, if taken literally, would invest the episcopal office. It is more important to bear in mind the extenuating fact, that the needs and distractions of the age seemed to call for a greater concentration of authority in the episcopate; and we might well be surprised, if at a great crisis the defence of an all-important institution were expressed in words care-Considerations suggested by this language.

¹ Smyrn. 8, comp. Magn. 7.

² Ephes. 5.

³ Smyrn. 8.

⁴ ib. comp. Magn. 4, Philad. 7.

⁵ Smyrn. 8.

⁶ Polyc. 8 ἐν ἐνότῃ Θεοῦ καὶ ἐπισκόπου (v. l. ἐπισκοπῇ): comp. Philad. 3, 8.

⁷ The word πρεσβυτέριον, which occurs 1 Tim. iv. 14, is very frequent in the Ignatian Epistles.

⁸ Magn. 13.

⁹ Trall. 12.

¹⁰ Ephes. 4; comp. the metaphor in Philad. 1.

¹¹ Trall. 2, 3, Magn. 6, Smyrn. 8.

¹² Magn. 2.

fully weighed and guarded. But whatever excuse the exigencies of the Church may suggest, it is hard to believe that this extravagance would have received the sanction of St Ignatius himself. At all events there is a jarring discord between the unfeigned humility which will not allow the saint to command the Christians of Rome like St Peter and St Paul, 'for they are Apostles, he a condemned man, they are free, he a slave until now¹,' and the lofty assumptions of this later writer, who sets the bishop in the place of God and on the throne of Christ.

The same views advanced in the interests of Ebionism.

Strangely enough, about the time when the Ignatian interpolator thus asserted the claims of the episcopate as a safeguard of orthodoxy, another writer was using similar means to advance a very different form of Christianity. The same organization, which is thus employed to consolidate and advance the Catholic Church, might serve equally well to establish a compact Ebionite community. I have already mentioned the author of the Clementine Homilies as a staunch advocate of episcopacy². His view of the sanctions and privileges of the office does not differ materially from that of the Ignatian writer. 'The multitude of the faithful,' he says, 'must obey a single person, that so it may be able to continue in harmony.' Monarchy is a necessary condition of peace; this may be seen from the aspect of the world around: at present there are many kings, and the result is discord and war; in the world to come God has appointed one King only, that 'by reason of monarchy an indestructible peace may be established: therefore all ought to follow some one person as guide, preferring him in honour as the image of God; and this guide must show the way that leadeth to the Holy City³.' Accordingly he delights to speak of the bishop as occupying the place or the seat of Christ⁴. Every insult, he says, and every honour offered to a bishop is carried to Christ and from Christ is taken up to the presence of the Father; and thus it is requited manifold⁵. Similarly another writer of the Clementine cycle, if he be not the same, compares Christ to the captain, the bishop to the mate, and the presbyters to the sailors, while the lower orders and the laity have each their proper place in the ship of the Church⁶.

¹ Ign. Rom. 2.

² See above, p. 209.

³ Clem. Hom. iii. 61, 62.

⁴ ib. iii. 60, 66, 70.

⁵ ib. iii. 66, 70.

⁶ ib. Ep. Clem. 15.

It is no surprise that such extravagant claims should not have been allowed to pass unchallenged. About the same time when these lofty hierarchical pretensions were advanced on the one hand in the Ignatian letters on behalf of Catholicism and on the other by the Clementine writers in the interests of Ebionism, a strong spiritualist reaction set in. If in its mental aspect the heresy of Montanus must be regarded as a protest against the speculative subtleties of Gnosticism, on its practical side it was equally a rebound from the aggressive tyranny of hierarchical assumption. Montanus taught that the true succession of the Spirit, the authorized channel of divine grace, must be sought not in the hierarchical but in the prophetic order. For a rigid outward system he substituted the free inward impulse. Wildly fanatical as were its manifestations, this reaction nevertheless issued from a true instinct which rebelled against the oppressive yoke of external tradition and did battle for the freedom of the individual spirit. Montanus was excommunicated and Montanism died out; but though dead, it yet spake; for a portion of its better spirit was infused into the Catholic Church, which it leavened and refreshed and invigorated.

2. IRENÆUS followed Ignatius after an interval of about two generations. With the altered circumstances of the Church, the aspect of the episcopal office has also undergone a change. The religious atmosphere is now charged with heretical speculations of all kinds. Amidst the competition of rival teachers, all eagerly bidding for support, the perplexed believer asks for some decisive test by which he may try the claims of the disputants. To this question Irenæus supplies an answer. 'If you wish,' he argues, 'to ascertain the doctrine of the Apostles, apply to the Church of the Apostles. In the succession of bishops tracing their descent from the primitive age and appointed by the Apostles themselves, you have a guarantee for the transmission of the pure faith, which no isolated, upstart, self-constituted teacher can furnish. There is the Church of Rome for instance, whose episcopal pedigree is perfect in all its links and whose earliest bishops, Linus and Clement, associated with the Apostles themselves: there is the Church of Smyrna again, whose bishop Polycarp, the disciple of St John, died only the other day¹.' Thus the episcopate is regarded now not so much as the centre

Montanism, a reaction against this extravagance.

2. IRENÆUS.

The bishop the depository of primitive truth.

¹ See especially iii. cc. 2, 3, 4, iv. 26. 2 sq., iv. 32. I, v. præf., v. 20. I, 2.

of ecclesiastical unity but rather as the depository of apostolic tradition.

The same view held by Hegesippus and Tertullian.

This view is not peculiar to Irenæus. It seems to have been advanced earlier by Hegesippus, for in a detached fragment he lays stress on the succession of the bishops at Rome and at Corinth, adding that in each church and in each succession the pure faith was preserved¹; so that he seems here to be controverting that 'gnosis falsely so called' which elsewhere he denounces². It is distinctly maintained by Tertullian, the younger contemporary of Irenæus, who refers, if not with the same frequency, at least with equal emphasis, to the tradition of the apostolic churches as preserved by the succession of the episcopate³.

3. CYPRIAN.

The bishop the vicegerent of Christ.

3. As two generations intervened between Ignatius and Irenæus, so the same period roughly speaking separates Irenæus from CYPRIAN. If with Ignatius the bishop is the centre of Christian unity, if with Irenæus he is the depository of the apostolic tradition, with Cyprian he is the absolute vicegerent of Christ in things spiritual. In mere language indeed it would be difficult to surpass the Ignatian writer, who probably lived a century earlier. With the single exception of the sacerdotal view of the ministry which had grown up meanwhile, Cyprian puts forward no assumption which this writer had not advanced either literally or substantially long before. This one exception however is all important, for it raised the sanctions of the episcopate to a higher level and put new force into old titles of respect. Theoretically therefore it may be said that Cyprian took his stand on the combination of the ecclesiastical authority as asserted by the Ignatian writer with the sacerdotal claim which had been developed in the half century just past. But the real influence which he exercised in the elevation of the episcopate consisted not in the novelty of his theoretical views, but in his practical energy and success. The absolute supremacy of the bishop had remained hitherto a lofty title or at least a vague ill-defined assumption: it became through his exertions a substantial and patent and world-wide fact. The first prelate whose force of character vibrated throughout the whole of Christendom, he was driven not less by the circumstances of his position than by his own tempe-

Influence of Cyprian on the episcopate.

¹ In Euseb. H. E. iv. 22. See above, p. 218.

² Euseb. H. E. iii. 32.

³ Tertull. de Præscr. 32.

rament and conviction to throw all his energy into this scale. And the permanent result was much vaster than he could have anticipated beforehand or realized after the fact. Forced into the episcopate against his will, he raised it to a position of absolute independence, from which it has never since been deposed. The two great controversies in which Cyprian engaged, though immediately arising out of questions of discipline, combined from opposite sides to consolidate and enhance the power of the bishops¹.

The first question of dispute concerned the treatment of such as had lapsed during the recent persecution under Decius. Cyprian found himself on this occasion doing battle for the episcopate against a twofold opposition, against the confessors who claimed the right of absolving and restoring these fallen brethren, and against his own presbyters who in the absence of their bishop supported the claims of the confessors. From his retirement he launched his shafts against this combined array, where an aristocracy of moral influence was leagued with an aristocracy of official position. With signal determination and courage in pursuing his aim, and with not less sagacity and address in discerning the means for carrying it out, Cyprian had on this occasion the further advantage, that he was defending the cause of order and right. He succeeded moreover in enlisting in his cause the rulers of the most powerful church in Christendom. The Roman clergy declared for the bishop and against the presbyters of Carthage. Of Cyprian's sincerity no reasonable question can be entertained. In maintaining the authority of his office he believed himself to be fighting his Master's battle, and he sought success as the only safeguard of the integrity of the Church of Christ. In this lofty and disinterested spirit, and with these advantages of position, he entered upon the contest.

It is unnecessary for my purpose to follow out the conflict in detail: to show how ultimately the positions of the two combatants were shifted, so that from maintaining discipline against the champions of too great laxity Cyprian found himself protecting the fallen against the advocates of too great severity: to trace the progress sq. (Strasburg, 1857). See also Rettberg's Thascius Cécilius Cyprianus p. 367 sq., and Huther's Cyprian's Lehre von der Kirche p. 59 sq.

¹ The influence of Cyprian on the episcopate is ably stated in two vigorous articles by Kayser entitled Cyprien ou l'Autonomie de l'Épiscopat in the Revue de Théologie, xv. pp. 138 sq., 242

First controversy.
Treatment of the lapsed.

Power of the bishop in his own church defined.

of the schism and the attempt to establish a rival episcopate : or to unravel the entanglements of the Novatian controversy and lay open the intricate relations between Rome and Carthage¹. It is sufficient to say that Cyprian's victory was complete. He triumphed over the confessors, triumphed over his own presbyters, triumphed over the schismatic bishop and his party. It was the most signal success hitherto achieved for the episcopate, because the battle had been fought and the victory won on this definite issue. The absolute supremacy of the episcopal office was thus established against the two antagonists from which it had most to fear, against a recognised aristocracy of ecclesiastical office and an irregular but not less powerful aristocracy of moral weight.

Second controversy. Re-baptism of heretics.

The position of the bishop with respect to the individual church over which he ruled was thus defined by the first contest in which Cyprian engaged. The second conflict resulted in determining his relation to the Church universal. The schism which had grown up during the first conflict created the difficulty which gave occasion to the second. A question arose whether baptism by heretics and schismatics should be held valid or not. Stephen the Roman bishop, pleading the immemorial custom of his church, recognised its validity. Cyprian insisted on rebaptism in such cases. Hitherto the bishop of Carthage had acted in cordial harmony with Rome : but now there was a collision. Stephen, inheriting the haughty temper and aggressive policy of his earlier predecessor Victor, excommunicated those who differed from the Roman usage in this matter. These arrogant assumptions were directly met by Cyprian. He summoned first one and then another synod of African bishops, who declared in his favour. He had on his side also the churches of Asia Minor, which had been included in Stephen's edict of excommunication. Thus the bolt hurled by Stephen fell innocuous, and the churches of Africa and Asia retained their practice. The principle asserted in the struggle was not unimportant. As in the former conflict Cyprian had maintained the independent supremacy of the bishop over the officers and members of his own congregation,

Relations
of the bishops to the Uni-

¹ The intricacy of the whole proceeding is a strong evidence of the genuineness of the letter and other documents which contain the account of the controversy. The situations of the antago-nists, varying and even interchanged with the change of circumstances, are very natural, but very unlike the invention of a forger who has a distinct side to maintain.

so now he contended successfully for his immunity from any inter-^{versal}ference from without. At a later period indeed Rome carried the ^{Church} victory, but the immediate result of this controversy was to establish ^{defined.} the independence and enhance the power of the episcopate. Moreover this struggle had the further and not less important consequence of defining and exhibiting the relations of the episcopate to the Church in another way. As the individual bishop had been pronounced indispensable to the existence of the individual community, so the episcopal order was now put forward as the absolute indefeasible representative of the universal Church. Synods of bishops indeed had been held frequently before; but under Cyprian's guidance they assumed a prominence which threw all existing precedents into the shade. A 'one undivided episcopate' was his watchword. The unity of the Church, he maintained, consists in the unanimity of the bishops¹. In this controversy, as in the former, he acted throughout on the principle, distinctly asserted, that the existence of the episcopal office was not a matter of practical advantage or ecclesiastical rule or even of apostolic sanction, but an absolute incontrovertible decree of God. The triumph of Cyprian therefore was the triumph of this principle.

The greatness of Cyprian's influence on the episcopate is indeed ^{Cyprian's} due to this fact, that with him the statement of the principle pre-^{view of the}cedes and necessitates the practical measures. Of the sharpness and ^{episco-}distinctness of his sacerdotal views it will be time to speak pre-^{pate.}sently; but of his conception of the episcopal office generally thus much may be said here, that he regards the bishop as exclusively the representative of God to the congregation and hardly, if at all, as the representative of the congregation before God. The bishop is the indispensable channel of divine grace, the indispensable bond of Christian brotherhood. The episcopate is not so much the roof as the foundation-stone of the ecclesiastical edifice: not so much the legitimate development as the primary condition of a church².

¹ De Unit. Eccl. 2 'Quam unitatem firmiter tenere et vindicare debemus maxime episcopi qui in ecclesia præsidemus, ut episcopatum quoque ipsum unum atque indivisum probemus'; and again 'Episcopatus unus est, cujus a singulis in solidum pars tenetur: ecclesia quoque una est etc.' So again he argues (Epist. 43) that, as there is one Church, there must be only 'unum altare et unum sacerdotium (i. e. one episcopate)'. Comp. also Epist. 46, 55, 67.

² Epist. 66 'Scire debes episcopum in ecclesia esse et ecclesiam in episcopo, et si quis cum episcopo non sit, in ecclesia non esse.' Epist. 33 'Ut ecclesia

The bishop is appointed directly by God, is responsible directly to God, is inspired directly from God¹. This last point deserves especial notice. Though in words he frequently defers to the established usage of consulting the presbyters and even the laity in the appointment of officers and in other matters affecting the well-being of the community, yet he only makes the concession to nullify it immediately. He pleads a direct official inspiration² which enables him to dispense with ecclesiastical custom and to act on his own responsibility. Though the presbyters may still have retained the shadow of a controlling power over the acts of the bishop, though the courtesy of language by which they were recognised as fellow-presbyters³ was not laid aside, yet for all practical ends the independent supremacy of the episcopate was completely established by the principles and the measures of Cyprian.

The power of the bishops a question of practical convenience,

In the investigation just concluded I have endeavoured to trace the changes in the relative position of the first and second orders of the ministry, by which the power was gradually concentrated in the hands of the former. Such a development involves no new principle and must be regarded chiefly in its practical bearings. It is plainly competent for the Church at any given time to entrust a particular office with larger powers, as the emergency may require. And, though the grounds on which the independent authority of the episcopate was at times defended may have been false or exaggerated, no reasonable objection can be taken to later forms of ecclesiastical polity because the measure of power accorded to the bishop does not remain exactly the same as in the Church of the subapostolic ages. Nay, to many thoughtful and dispassionate minds even the gigantic power wielded by the popes during the middle super episcopos constituatur et omnis actus ecclesiæ per eosdem præpositos gubernetur.' Hence the expression 'nec episcopum nec ecclesiam cogitans,' Epist. 41; hence also 'honor episcopi' is associated not only with 'ecclesiæ ratio' (Epist. 33) but even with 'timor dei' (Epist. 15). Compare also the language (Epist. 59) 'Nec ecclesia istic cuiquam clauditur nec episcopus alicui denegatur', and again (Epist. 43), 'Soli cum episcopis non sint, qui contra episcopos rebellarunt.'

¹ See esp. Epist. 3, 43, 55, 59, 73, and above all 66 (Ad Papiam).

² Epist. 38 'Expectanda non sunt testimonia humana cum præcedunt divina suffragia'; Epist. 39 'Nō humana suffragatione sed divina dignatione conjunctum'; Epist. 40 'Admonitos nos et instructos sciatis dignatione divina ut Numidicus presbyter etc.'

³ See above p. 228, note 3.

ages will appear justifiable in itself (though they will repudiate the false pretensions on which it was founded, and the false opinions which were associated with it), since only by such a providential concentration of authority could the Church, humanly speaking, have braved the storms of those ages of anarchy and violence. Now however it is my purpose to investigate the origin and growth of a new principle, which is nowhere enunciated in the New Testament, but which notwithstanding has worked its way into general recognition and seriously modified the character of later Christianity. The progress of the sacerdotal view of the ministry is one of the most striking and important phenomena in the history of the Church.

It has been pointed out already that the sacerdotal functions and privileges, which alone are mentioned in the apostolic writings, pertain to all believers alike and do not refer solely or specially to the ministerial office. If to this statement it be objected that the inference is built upon the silence of the Apostles and Evangelists, and that such reasoning is always precarious, the reply is that an exclusive sacerdotalism (as the word is commonly understood)¹ contradicts the general tenour of the Gospel. But indeed the strength or weakness of an argument drawn from silence depends wholly on the circumstance under which the silence is maintained. And in this case it cannot be considered devoid of weight. In the Pastoral Epistles for instance, which are largely occupied with questions relating to the Christian ministry, it seems scarcely possible that this aspect should have been overlooked, if it had any place in St Paul's teaching. The Apostle discusses at length the requirements, the responsibilities, the sanctions, of the ministerial office: he regards the presbyter as an example, as a teacher, as a philanthropist, as a ruler. How then, it may well be asked, are the sacerdotal functions, the sacerdotal privileges, of the office wholly set aside? If these claims were recognised by him at all, they must necessarily have taken a foremost place. The same argument again applies with and unconnected with sacerdotalism.

No sacerdotalism in the New Testament.

¹ In speaking of sacerdotalism, I assume the term to have essentially the same force as when applied to the Jewish priesthood. In a certain sense (to be considered hereafter) all officers appointed to minister 'for men in things pertaining to God' may be called priests; and sacerdotal phraseology, when first applied to the Christian ministry, may have borne this innocent meaning. But at a later date it was certainly so used as to imply a substantial identity of character with the Jewish priesthood, i. e. to designate the Christian minister as one who offers sacrifices and makes atonement.

Its rapid spread at a later
date.

not less force to those passages in the Epistles to the Corinthians, where St Paul asserts his apostolic authority against his detractors. Nevertheless, so entirely had the primitive conception of the Christian Church been supplanted by this sacerdotal view of the ministry, before the northern races were converted to the Gospel, and the dialects derived from the Latin took the place of the ancient tongue, that the languages of modern Europe very generally supply only one word to represent alike the priests of the Jewish or heathen ceremonial and the presbyter of the Christian ministry¹.

For, though no distinct traces of sacerdotalism are visible in the ages immediately after the Apostles, yet having once taken root in the Church it shot up rapidly into maturity. Towards the close of the second century we discern the first germs appearing above the surface: yet, shortly after the middle of the third, the plant has all but attained its full growth. The origin of this idea, the progress of its development, and the conditions favourable to its spread, will be considered in the present section of this essay.

Distinction of the clergy from the laity

A separation of orders, it is true, appeared at a much earlier date, and was in some sense involved in the appointment of a special ministry. This, and not more than this, was originally contained in the distinction of clergy and laity. If the sacerdotal view of the ministry engrafted itself on this distinction, it nevertheless was not necessarily implied or even indirectly suggested thereby.

¹ It is a significant fact that in those languages which have only one word to express the two ideas, this word etymologically represents 'presbyterus' and not 'sacerdos,' e.g. the French prêtre, the German priester, and the English priest; thus showing that the sacerdotal idea was imported and not original. In the Italian, where two words prete and sacerdote exist side by side, there is no marked difference in usage, except that prete is the more common. If the latter brings out the sacerdotal idea more prominently, the former is also applied to Jewish and Heathen priests and therefore distinctly involves this idea. Wiclif's version of the New Testament naturally conforms to the Vulgate, in which it seems to be the rule to translate πρεσβύτεροι by 'presbyteri' (in Wiclif 'preestes') where it obviously denotes the second order in the ministry (e.g. Acts xiv. 23, 1 Tim. v. 17, 19, Tit. i. 5, James v. 14), and by 'seniores' (in Wiclif 'eldres' or 'elder men') in other passages: but if so, this rule is not always successfully applied (e.g. Acts xi. 30, xxi. 18, 1 Pet. v. 1). A doubt about the meaning may explain the anomaly that the word is translated 'presbyteri,' 'preestes,' Acts xv. 2, and 'seniores,' 'elder men,' Acts xv. 4, 6, 22, xvi. 4; though the persons intended are the same. In Acts xx. 17, it is rendered in Wiclif's version 'the grettest men of birthe,' a misunderstanding of the Vulgate 'maiores natu.' The English versions of the reformers and the reformed Church from Tyndale downward translate πρεσβύτεροι uniformly by 'elders.'

The term 'clerus,' as a designation of the ministerial office, did not owing to any existing associations convey the idea of sacerdotal functions. The word is not used of the Aaronic priesthood in any special sense which would explain its transference to the Christian ministry. It is indeed said of the Levites, that they have no 'clerus' in the land, the Lord Himself being their 'clerus'¹. But the Jewish priesthood is never described conversely as the special 'clerus' of Jehovah: while on the other hand the metaphor thus inverted is more than once applied to the whole Israelite people². Up to this point therefore the analogy of Old Testament usage would have suggested 'clerus' as a name rather for the entire body of the faithful than for the ministry specially or exclusively: nor do other references to the clerus or lot in connexion with the Levitical priesthood countenance its special application. The tithes, it is true, were assigned to the sons of Levi as their 'clerus'³; but in this there is nothing distinctive, and in fact the word is employed much more prominently in describing the lands allotted to the whole people. Again the courses of priests and Levites selected to conduct the temple-service were appointed by lot⁴; but the mode adopted in distributing a particular set of duties is far too special to have supplied a distinctive name for the whole order. If indeed it were an established fact that the Aaronic priesthood at the time of the Christian era commonly bore the name of 'clergy,' we might be driven to explain the designation in this or in some similar way; but apparently no evidence of any such usage exists⁵, and it is therefore needless to cast about for an explanation of a fact which itself is only conjectural. The origin of the term clergy, as applied to the Christian ministry, must be sought elsewhere.

And the record of the earliest appointment made by the Origin of ¹ Deut. x. 9, xviii. 1, 2; comp. Num. xxvi. 62, Deut. xii. 12, xiv. 27, 29, Josh. xiv. 3. Jerome (Epist. lii. 5, i. p. 258) says, 'Propterea vocantur clerici, vel quia de sorte sunt Domini, vel quia ipse Dominus sors, id est pars, clericorum est.' The former explanation would be reasonable, if it were supported by the language of the Old Testament: the latter is plainly inadequate.

² Deut. iv. 20 εἶναι αὐτῷ λαὸν ἑγκλη-ρον: comp. ix. 29 οὗτοι λαὸς σου καὶ κλήρὸς σου.

³ Num. xviii. 21, 24, 26.

⁴ 1 Chron. xxiv. 5, 7, 31, xxv. 8, 9.

⁵ On the other hand λαὸς is used of the people, as contrasted either with the rulers or with the priests. From this latter contrast comes λαϊκός, 'laic' or 'profane,' and λαϊκῶς 'to profane'; which, though not found in the LXX, occur frequently in the versions of Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion (λαϊκός, 1 Sam. xxi. 4, Ezek. xlvi. 15; λαϊκῶς, Deut. xx. 6, xxviii. 30, Ruth i. 12, Ezek. vii. 22).

not derived from the Levitical priesthood.

'Clerus' as a name for the Christian ministry. Christian Church after the Ascension of the Lord seems to supply the clue. Exhorting the assembled brethren to elect a successor in place of Judas, St Peter tells them that the traitor 'had been numbered among them and had received the lot (κληρον) of the ministry': while in the account of the subsequent proceedings it is recorded that the Apostles 'distributed lots' to the brethren, and that 'the lot fell on Matthias and he was added to the eleven Apostles¹.' The following therefore seems to be the sequence of meanings, by which the word κληρος arrived at this peculiar sense: (1) the lot by which the office was assigned; (2) the office thus assigned by lot; (3) the body of persons holding the office. The first two senses are illustrated by the passages quoted from the Acts; and from the second to the third the transition is easy and natural. It must not be supposed however that the mode of appointing officers by lot prevailed generally in the early Church. Besides the case of Matthias no other instance is recorded in the New Testament; nor is this procedure likely to have been commonly adopted. But just as in the passage quoted the word is used to describe the office of Judas, though Judas was certainly not selected by lot, so generally from signifying one special mode of appointment to office it got to signify office in the Church generally². If this account of the application of 'clerus' to the Christian ministry be correct, we should expect to find it illustrated by a corresponding progress in the actual usage of the word. And this is in fact the case. The sense 'clerical appointment or office' chronologically precedes the sense 'clergy'. The former meaning occurs several times in Irenæus. He speaks of Hyginus as 'holding the ninth clerus of the episcopal succession from the Apostles³'; and of Eleutherus in like manner he says, 'He now occupies the clerus of the episcopate in the tenth place from the Apostles⁴.' On the

¹ Acts i. 17 ἔλαχεν τὸν κληρον, 26 ἔδωκαν κλήρους αὐτοῖς καὶ ἔπεσεν ὁ κληρος ἐπὶ Μαθθίαν. In ver. 25 κληρον is a false reading. The use of the word in 1 Pet. v. 3 κατακυριεύοντες τῶν κλήρων (i. e. of the flocks assigned to them) does not illustrate this meaning.

² See Clem. Alex. Quis div. salv. 42, where κληροῦν is 'to appoint to the ministry'; and Iren. iii. 3. 3 κληροῦσθαι τὴν ἐπισκοπήν. A similar extension of meaning is seen in this same word κληρος applied to land. Signifying originally a piece of ground assigned by lot, it gets to mean landed property generally, whether obtained by assignment or by inheritance or in any other way.

³ Iren. i. 27. 1.

⁴ Iren. iii. 3. 3. In this passage however, as in the preceding, the word is explained by a qualifying genitive. In Hippol. Her. ix. 12 (p. 290), ἤρξαντο other hand the earliest instance of 'clerus', meaning clergy, seems to occur in Tertullian¹, who belongs to the next generation.

It will thus be seen that the use of 'clerus' to denote the ministry cannot be traced to the Jewish priesthood, and is therefore wholly unconnected with any sacerdotal views. The term does indeed recognise the clergy as an order distinct from the laity; but this is a mere question of ecclesiastical rule or polity, and involves no doctrinal bearings. The origin of sacerdotal phraseology and ideas must be sought elsewhere.

Attention has been already directed to the absence of any appeal to sacerdotal claims in the Pastoral Epistles. The silence of the apostolic fathers deserves also to be noticed. Though the genuine letters of all three may be truly said to hinge on questions relating to the ministry, no distinct traces of this influence are visible. St Clement, as the representative of the Roman Church, writes to the Christian brotherhood at Corinth, offering friendly counsel in their disputes and rebuking their factious and unworthy conduct towards certain presbyters whom, though blameless, they had ejected from office. He appeals to motives of Christian love, to principles of Christian order. He adduces a large number of examples from biblical history condemnatory of jealousy and insubordination. He urges that men, who had been appointed directly by the Apostles or by persons themselves so appointed ought to have received better treatment. Dwelling at great length on the subject, he nevertheless advances no sacerdotal claims or immunities on behalf of the ejected ministers. He does, it is true, adduce the Aaronic priesthood and the Temple service as showing that God has appointed set persons and set places and will have all things done in order. He had before illustrated this lesson by the subordination of ranks in an army, and by the relation of the different members of the human body: he had insisted on the duties of

No sacerdotal idea conveyed by the term.

Silence of the apostolic fathers on sacerdotalism.

Import of his comparison with the Aaronic priesthood.

ἐπίσκοποι καὶ πρεσβύτεροι καὶ δίδκονοι διγάμοι καὶ τρίγαμοι καθίστασθαι εἰς κλήρους, it is used absolutely of 'clerical offices.' The Epistle of the Gallican Churches (Euseb. H. E. v. 1) speaks more than once of the κλήρος τῶν μαρτύρων, i.e. the order or rank of martyrs: comp. Test. xii Patr. Levi 8. See Ritschl p. 390 sq., to whom I am indebted for several of the passages which are quoted in this investigation.

¹ e.g. de Monog. 12 'Unde enim episcopi et clerus?' and again 'Extollimur et inflamur adversus clerum.' Perhaps however earlier instances may have escaped notice. In Clem. Alex. Quis div. salv. 42 the word seems not to be used in this sense.

the strong towards the weak, of the rich towards the poor, of the wise towards the ignorant, and so forth: he had enforced the appeal by reminding his readers of the utter feebleness and insignificance of man in the sight of God, as represented in the Scriptures of the Old Testament; and then follows the passage which contains the allusion in question: 'He hath not commanded (the offerings and ministrations) to be performed at random or in disorder, but at fixed times and seasons; and where and through whom He willeth them to be performed, He hath ordained by His supreme will. They therefore who make their offerings at the appointed seasons are acceptable and blessed, since following the ordinances of the Master they do not go wrong. For to the high-priest peculiar services are entrusted, and the priests have their peculiar office assigned to them, and on Levites peculiar ministrations are imposed: the layman is bound by lay ordinances. Let each of you, brethren, in his own rank give thanks to God, retaining a good conscience, not transgressing the appointed rule of his service (λειτουργίας) etc.'¹ Here it is clear that in St Clement's conception the sanction possessed in common by the Aaronic priesthood and the Christian ministry is not the sacerdotal consecration, but the divinely appointed order. He passes over in silence the numerous passages in the Old Testament which enjoin obedience to the priests; while the only sentence (§ 42) which he puts forward as anticipating and enforcing the authority of the Christian ministry is a misquoted and misinterpreted verse from Isaiah; 'I will establish their overseers (bishops) in righteousness and their ministers (deacons) in faith'². Again a little later he mentions in illustration the murmuring of precarious argument, and moreover the retention or rejection of these words does not materially affect the present question.

¹ Clem. Rom. 40, 41. Neander (Church History, i. p. 272 note, Bohn's translation) conjectures that this passage is an 'interpolation from a hierarchical interest,' and Dean Milman (Hist. of Christianity, iii. p. 259) says that it is 'rejected by all judicious and impartial scholars.' At the risk of forfeiting all claim to judiciousness and impartiality one may venture to demur to this arbitrary criticism. On the other hand the clause ὁ λαϊκὸς κ.τ.λ. may possibly be spurious, for it is not connected by any particle with the context; but this is a

² Is. lx. 17, where the A. V. correctly renders the original, 'I will also make thy officers (lit. magistrates) peace and thine exactors (i.e. task-masters) righteousness'; i.e. there shall be no tyranny or oppression. The LXX departs from the original, and Clement has altered the LXX. By this double divergence a reference to the two orders of the ministry is obtained.

the Israelites which was rebuked by the budding of Aaron's rod¹. But here too he makes it clear how far he considers the analogy to extend. He calls the sedition in the one case 'jealousy concerning the priesthood', in the other 'strife concerning the honour of the episcopate'². He keeps the names and the offices distinct. The significance of this fact will be felt at once by comparing his language with the expressions used by any later writer, such as Cyprian, who was penetrated with the spirit of sacerdotalism³.

Of St Ignatius, as the champion of episcopacy, much has been said already. It is sufficient to add here, that he never regards the ministry as a sacerdotal office. But the silence of the writer of the interpolated and forged epistles is a more important and remarkable fact. While these letters teem with passages enjoining the strictest obedience to bishops, while their language is frequently so strong as to be almost profane, this Ignatian writer never once appeals to sacerdotal claims⁴, though such an appeal would have made his case more than doubly strong. If it be ever safe to take the sentiments of an individual writer as expressing the belief of his age, we may infer from the silence which pervades these letters, that the sacerdotal view of the ministry had not yet found its way into the Christian Church.

When we pass on to the third apostolic father, the same phenomenon is repeated. Polycarp, like Clement and Ignatius, occupies much space in discussing the duties and the claims of Christian ministers. He takes occasion especially to give his correspondents advice as to a certain presbyter who had disgraced his office by a grave offence⁵. Yet he again knows nothing, or at least says nothing, of

¹ Clem. Rom. 43.

² Contrast § 43 ζηλον ἐμπειρόντος περὶ τῆς ἱερωσύνης with § 44 ἐπὶ τοῦ ὀνόματος τῆς ἐπισκοπῆς. The common feature which connects the two offices together is stated in the words, § 43 ὅσα μὴ ἀκαταστασία γένηται.

³ See below p. 257.

⁴ Some passages are quoted in Greenwood Cathedra Petri i. p. 73 as tending in this direction, e.g. Philad. 9 καλοὶ καὶ οἱ ἱερεῖς, κρείσσον δὲ ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς κ.τ.λ. But rightly interpreted they do not favour this view. In the passage quoted for instance, the writer seems to be maintaining the superiority of the new covenant, as represented by the great High-Priest (ἀρχιερεὺς) in and through whom the whole Church has access to God, over the old dispensation of the Levitical priesthood (ιερεῖς). If this interpretation be correct, the passage echoes the teaching of the Epistle to the Hebrews, and is opposed to exclusive sacerdotalism. On the meaning of θυσιαστήριον in the Ignatian Epistles see below p. 263, note 2.

⁵ See above p. 62 sq.

any sacerdotal privileges which claimed respect, or of any sacerdotal sanctity which has been violated.

Justin Martyr maintains an universal priesthood.

Justin Martyr writes about a generation later. He speaks at length and with emphasis on the eucharistic offerings. Here at least we might expect to find sacerdotal views of the Christian ministry propounded. Yet this is far from being the case. He does indeed lay stress on sacerdotal functions, but these belong to the whole body of the Church, and are not in any way the exclusive right of the clergy. 'So we,' he writes, when arguing against Trypho the Jew, 'who through the name of Jesus have believed as one man in God the maker of the universe, having divested ourselves of our filthy garments, that is our sins, through the name of His first-born Son, and having been refined (πυρωθέντες) by the word of His calling, are the true high-priestly race of God, as God Himself also beareth witness, saying that in every place among the Gentiles are men offering sacrifices well-pleasing unto Him and pure (Mal. i. 11). Yet God doth not receive sacrifices from any one, except through His priests. Therefore God anticipating all sacrifices through this name, which Jesus Christ ordained to be offered, I mean those offered by the Christians in every region of the earth with (ἐπὶ) the thanksgiving (the eucharist) of the bread and of the cup, beareth witness that they are well-pleasing to Him; but the sacrifices offered by you and through those your priests he rejecteth, saying, "And your sacrifices I will not accept from your hands etc. (Mal. i. 10)"¹. The whole Christian people therefore (such is Justin's conception) have not only taken the place of the Aaronic priesthood, but have become a nation of high-priests, being made one with the great High-Priest of the new covenant and presenting their eucharistic offerings in His name.

Irenæus

Another generation leads us from Justin Martyr to Irenæus. When Irenæus writes, the second century is very far advanced. Yet still the silence which has accompanied us hitherto remains unbroken. And here again it is important to observe that Irenæus, if he held the sacerdotal view, had every motive for urging it, since the importance and authority of the episcopate occupy a large space in his teaching. Nevertheless he not only withholds this title as a special designation of the Christian ministry, but advances an entirely different view of the priestly office. He recognises only the priesthood of moral holiness, the priesthood of apostolic self-denial. Thus commenting on the reference made by our Lord to the incident in David's life where the king and his followers eat the shew-bread, 'which it is not lawful to eat save for the priests alone', Irenæus remarks¹; 'He excuseth His disciples by the words of the law, and signifieth that it is lawful for priests to act freely. For David had been called to be a priest in the sight of God, although Saul carried on a persecution against him; for all just men belong to the sacerdotal order². Now all apostles of the Lord are priests, for they inherit neither lands nor houses here, but ever attend on the altar and on God': 'Who are they', he goes on, 'that have left father and mother and have renounced all their kindred for the sake of the word of God and His covenant, but the disciples of the Lord? Of these Moses saith again, "But they shall have no inheritance; for the Lord Himself shall be their inheritance"; and again, "The priests, the Levites, in the whole tribe of Levi shall have no part nor inheritance with Israel: the first-fruits (fructificationes) of the Lord are their inheritance; they shall eat them." For this reason also Paul saith, "I require not the gift, but I require the fruit." The disciples of the Lord, he would say, were allowed when hungry to take food of the seeds (they had sown): for "The labourer is worthy of his food."' Again, striking upon the same topic in a later passage³ and commenting on the words of Jeremiah (xxxi. 14), "I will intoxicate the soul of the priests the sons of Levi, and my people shall be filled with my good things," he adds, 'we have shown in a former book, that all disciples of the Lord are priests and Levites: who also profaned the Sabbath in the temple and are blameless.' Thus Irenæus too recognises the whole body of the faithful under the new dispensation as the counterparts of the sons of Levi under the old. The position of the Apostles and Evangelists has not yet been abandoned.

¹ Dial. c. Tryph. c. 116, 117, p. 344.

A few years later, but still before the close of the century, Poly-

¹ Hær. iv. 8. 3.

² This sentence is cited by John Damascene and Antonius Melissa πᾶς βασιλεὺς δίκαιος ιερατικὴν ἔχει τάξιν; but the words were quoted doubtless from memory by the one writer and borrowed by the other from him. βασιλεὺς is not represented in the Latin and does not suit the context. The close conformity of their quotations from the Ignatian letters is a sufficient proof that these two writers are not independent authorities: see the passages in Cureton's Corp. Ignat. p. 180 sq.

³ Hær. v. 34. 3.

acknowledges only a moral priesthood.

Explanation of a passage in Poly-crates.

crates of Ephesus writes to Victor of Rome. Incidentally he speaks of St John as 'having been made a priest' and 'wearing the mitre'¹; and this might seem to be a distinct expression of sacerdotal views, for the 'mitre' to which he alludes is doubtless the tiara of the Jewish high-priest. But it may very reasonably be questioned if this is the correct meaning of the passage. Whether St John did actually wear this decoration of the high-priestly office, or whether Polycrates has mistaken a symbolical expression in some earlier writer for an actual fact, or whether lastly his language itself should be treated as a violent metaphor, I have had occasion to discuss elsewhere². But in any case the notice is explained by the language of St John himself, who regards the whole body of believers as high-priests of the new covenant³; and it is certain that the contemporaries of Polycrates still continued to hold similar language⁴. As a figurative expression or as a literal fact, the notice points to St John as the veteran teacher, the chief representative, of a pontifical race. On the other hand, it is possible that this was not the sense which Polycrates himself attached to the figure or the fact: and if so, we have here perhaps the earliest passage in any extant Christian writing where the sacerdotal view of the ministry is distinctly put forward.

Clement
of Alexandria.

Clement of Alexandria was a contemporary of Polycrates. Though his extant writings are considerable in extent and though they are largely occupied with questions of Christian ethics and social life, the ministry does not hold a prominent place in them. In the few passages where he mentions it, he does not betray any tendency to sacerdotal or even to hierarchical views. The bias of his mind indeed lay in an opposite direction. He would be much more inclined to maintain an aristocracy of intellectual contemplation than of sacerdotal office. And in Alexandria generally, as we have seen, the development of the hierarchy was slower than in other churches. How far he is from maintaining a sacerdotal view of the ministry

¹ In Euseb. H. E. v. 24 ὁς ἐγενήθη ἱερεὺς τὸ πέταλον πεφορεκός. Comp. Tertull. adv. Jud. 14 'exornatus podere et mitra', Test. xii Patr. Levi 8 ἀναστὰς ἐνδύσαι τὴν στολὴν τῆς ἱερατείας... τὸν ποδῆρην τῆς ἀληθείας καὶ τὸ πέταλον τῆς πίστews κ.τ.λ. See also, as an illustration of the metaphor, Tertull. Monog. 12 'Cum ad peræquationem disciplinæ sacerdotalis provocamur, deponimus infulas.'

² See Galatians p. 345 note.

³ Rev. ii. 17; see the commentators.

⁴ So Justin in the words already quoted (p. 250), Dial. c. Tryph. § 116 ἀρχιερατικὸν τὸ ἀληθινὸν γένος ἐσμὲν τοῦ Θεοῦ. See also the passage of Origen quoted below p. 255.

and how substantially he coincides with Irenæus in this respect, will appear from the following passage. 'It is possible for men even now, by exercising themselves in the commandments of the Lord and by living a perfect gnostic life in obedience to the Gospel, to be inscribed in the roll of the Apostles. Such men are genuine presbyters of the Church and true deacons of the will of God, if they practise and teach the things of the Lord, being not indeed ordained by men nor considered righteous because they are presbyters, but enrolled in the presbytery because they are righteous: and though here on earth they may not be honoured with a chief seat, yet shall they sit on the four and twenty thrones judging the people¹.' It is quite consistent with this truly spiritual view, that he should elsewhere recognise the presbyter, the deacon, and the layman, as distinct orders². But on the other hand he never uses the words 'priest,' 'priestly,' 'priesthood,' of the Christian ministry. In one passage indeed he contrasts laity and priesthood, but without any such reference. Speaking of the veil of the temple and assigning to it a symbolical meaning, he describes it as 'a barrier against laic unbelief,' behind which 'the priestly ministration is hidden³.' Here the laymen and the priests are respectively those who reject and those who appropriate the spiritual mysteries of the Gospel. Accordingly in the context St Clement, following up the hint thrown out in the Epistle to the Hebrews, gives a spiritual meaning to all the furniture of the holy place.

His younger contemporary Tertullian is the first to assert direct sacerdotal claims on behalf of the Christian ministry. Of the heretics he complains that they impose sacerdotal functions on laymen⁴. 'The right of giving baptism,' he says elsewhere, 'belongs to the chief priest (summus sacerdos), that is, the bishop⁵.' 'No woman,' he asserts, 'ought to teach, baptize, celebrate the eucharist, or arrogate to herself the performance of any duty pertaining to males, much less of the sacerdotal office⁶.' And generally he uses the words sacerdos, sacerdotium, sacerdotalis, of the Christian ministry. It seems

His 'gnostic' priest-hood.

Tertullian holds a sacerdotal view of the ministry,

¹ Strom. vi. 13, p. 793.

² Strom. iii. 90, p. 552.

³ Strom. v. 33 sq., p. 665 sq. Bp. Kaye (Clement of Alexandria p. 464) incorrectly adduces this passage as an express mention of 'the distinction between the clergy and laity.'

⁴ de Præscr. Hær. 41 'Nam et laicis sacerdotalia munera injungunt.'

⁵ de Baptismo 17.

⁶ de Virg. vel. 9.

yet qualifies it by his assertion of an universal priesthood.

plain moreover from his mode of speaking, that such language was not peculiar to himself but passed current in the churches among which he moved. Yet he himself supplies the true counterpoise to this special sacerdotalism in his strong assertion of the universal priesthood of all true believers. 'We should be foolish,' so he writes when arguing against second marriages, 'to suppose that a latitude is allowed to laymen which is denied to priests. Are not we laymen also priests? It is written, "He hath also made us a kingdom and priests to God and His Father." It is the authority of the Church which makes a difference between the order (the clergy) and the people—this authority and the consecration of their rank by the assignment of special benches to the clergy. Thus where there is no bench of clergy, you present the eucharistic offerings and baptize and are your own sole priest. For where three are gathered together, there is a church, even though they be laymen. Therefore if you exercise the rights of a priest in cases of necessity, it is your duty also to observe the discipline enjoined on a priest, where of necessity you exercise the rights of a priest¹.' And in another treatise he writes in bitter irony, 'When we begin to exalt and inflame ourselves against the clergy, then we are all one; then we are all priests, because "He made us priests to God and His Father": but when we are required to submit ourselves equally to the priestly discipline, we throw off our fillets and are no longer equal².' These passages, it is true, occur in treatises probably written after Tertullian had become wholly or in part a Montanist: but this consideration is of little consequence, for they bear witness to the fact that the scriptural doctrine of an universal priesthood was common ground to himself and his opponents, and had not yet been obscured by the sacerdotal view of the Christian ministry³.

Sacerdotal An incidental expression in Hippolytus serves to show that a ¹ de Exh. Cast. 7. See Kaye's Tertullian p. 211, whose interpretation of 'honor per ordinis consessum sanctificatus' I have adopted.

² de Monog. 12. I have taken the reading 'impares' for 'pares,' as required by the context.

³ Tertullian regards Christ, our great High-Priest, as the counterpart under the new dispensation of the priest under the old, and so interprets the text

'Show thyself to the priest'; adv. Marc. iv. 9, adv. Jud. 14. Again, he uses 'sacerdos' in a moral sense, de Spectac. 16 'sacerdotes pacis,' de Cult. Fem. ii. 12 'sacerdotes pudicitiae,' ad Uxor. i. 6 (comp. 7) 'virginitatis et viduitatis sacerdotia.' On the other hand in de Pall. 4 he seems to compare the Christian minister with the heathen priests, but too much stress must not be laid on a rhetorical image.

few years later than Tertullian sacerdotal terms were commonly used to designate the different orders of the clergy. 'We,' says the zealous bishop of Portus, 'being successors of the Apostles and partaking of the same grace both of high-priesthood and of teaching and accounted guardians of the Church, do not close our eyes drowsily or tacitly suppress the true word, etc.'¹'

The march of sacerdotal ideas was probably slower at Alexandria than at Carthage or Rome. Though belonging to the next generation, Origen's views are hardly so advanced as those of Tertullian. In the temple of the Church, he says, there are two sanctuaries: the heavenly, accessible only to Jesus Christ, our great High-Priest; the earthly, open to all priests of the new covenant, that is, to all faithful believers. For Christians are a sacerdotal race and therefore have access to the outer sanctuary. There they must present their offerings, their holocausts of love and self-denial. From this outer sanctuary our High-Priest takes the fire, as He enters the Holy of Holies to offer incense to the Father (see Lev. xvi. 12)². Very many professed Christians, he writes elsewhere (I am here abridging his words), occupied chiefly with the concerns of this world and dedicating few of their actions to God, are represented by the tribes, who merely present their tithes and first-fruits. On the other hand 'those who are devoted to the divine word and are dedicated sincerely to the sole worship of God, may not unreasonably be called priests and Levites according to the difference in this respect of their impulses tending thereto.' Lastly 'those who excel the men of their own generation, perchance will be high-priests.' They are only high-priests however after the order of Aaron, our Lord Himself being High-Priest after the order of Melchisedek³. Again in a third place he says, 'The Apostles and they that are made like unto the Apostles, being priests after the order of the great High-Priest, having received the knowledge of the worship of God and being instructed by the Spirit, know for what sins they ought to offer sacrifices, etc.'⁴. In all these passages Origen has taken spiritual enlightenment and not sacerdotal office to be the Christian counterpart to the Aaronic priesthood. Elsewhere how-language

in Hippolytus.

Origen interprets the priesthood spiritually,

¹ Hær. procem. p. 3.

² Hom. ix in Lev. 9, 10 (II. p. 243 Delarue).

³ In Joann. i. § 3 (IV. p. 3).

⁴ de Orat. 28 (I. p. 255). See also Hom. iv in Num. 3 (II. p. 283).

sacerdotal terms to the ministry. ever he makes use of sacerdotal terms to describe the ministry of the Church¹; and in one place distinguishes the priests and the Levites as representing the presbyters and deacons respectively².

Hitherto the sacerdotal view of the Christian ministry has not been held apart from a distinct recognition of the sacerdotal functions of the whole Christian body. The minister is thus regarded as a priest, because he is the mouthpiece, the representative, of a priestly race. Such appears to be the conception of Tertullian, who speaks of the clergy as separate from the laity only because the Church in the exercise of her prerogative has for convenience entrusted to them the performance of certain sacerdotal functions belonging properly to the whole congregation, and of Origen, who, giving a moral and spiritual interpretation to the sacerdotal office, considers the priesthood of the clergy to differ from the priesthood of the laity only in degree, in so far as the former devote their time and their thoughts more entirely to God than the latter. So long as this important aspect is kept in view, so long as the priesthood of the ministry is regarded as springing from the priesthood of the whole body, the teaching of the Apostles has not been directly violated. But still it was not a safe nomenclature which assigned the terms sacerdos, ἱερεύς, and the like, to the ministry, as a special designation. The appearance of this phenomenon marks the period of transition from the universal sacerdotalism of the New Testament to the particular sacerdotalism of a later age.

Cyprian the champion of undisguised sacerdotalism.

If Tertullian and Origen are still hovering on the border, Cyprian has boldly transferred himself into the new domain. It is not only that he uses the terms sacerdos, sacerdotium, sacerdotalis, of the ministry with a frequency hitherto without parallel. But he treats all the passages in the Old Testament which refer to the privileges, the sanctions, the duties, and the responsibilities

¹ Hom. v in Lev. 4 (II. p. 208 sq.) 'Discant sacerdotes Domini qui ecclesiis præsunt,' and also ib. II. 4 (p. 191) 'Cum non erubescit sacerdoti Domini indicare peccatum suum et querere medicinam' (for he quotes James v. 14 in illustration, p. 189). But Hom. x in Num. 1, 2 (II. p. 302) quoted by Redepenning (Origenes II. p. 417) hardly bears this sense, for the 'pontifex' applies to our Lord; and it is clear from

Hom. in Ps. xxxvii. § 6 (II. p. 688) that in Origen's opinion the confessor to the penitent need not be an ordained minister. The passages in Redepenning's Origenes bearing on this subject are I. p. 357, II. pp. 250, 417, 436 sq.

² Hom. xii in Jerem. 3 (III. p. 196) 'If any one therefore among these priests (I mean us the presbyters) or among these Levites who stand about the people (I mean the deacons) etc.'

of the Aaronic priesthood, as applying to the officers of the Christian Church. His opponents are profane and sacrilegious; they have passed sentence of death on themselves by disobeying the command of the Lord in Deuteronomy to 'hear the priest'; they have forgotten the injunction of Solomon to honour and reverence God's priests²; they have despised the example of St Paul who regretted that he 'did not know it was the high priest'³; they have been guilty of the sin of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram⁴. These passages are urged again and again. They are urged moreover, as applying not by parity of reasoning, not by analogy of circumstance, but as absolute and immediate and unquestionable. As Cyprian crowned the edifice of episcopal power, so also was he the first to put forward without relief or disguise these sacerdotal assumptions; and so uncompromising was the tone in which he asserted them, that nothing was left to his successors but to enforce his principles and reiterate his language⁵.

After thus tracing the gradual departure from the Apostolic teaching in the encroachment of the sacerdotal on the pastoral and ministerial view of the clergy, it will be instructive to investigate the causes to which this divergence from primitive truth may be ascribed. To the question whether the change was due to Jewish or Gentile influences, opposite answers have been given. Were sacerdotal views due to Jewish or Gentile influences? To some it has appeared as a reproduction of the Aaronic priesthood, due to Pharisaic tendencies, such as we find among St Paul's converts in Galatia and at Corinth, still lingering in the Church: to others, as imported into Christianity by the ever increasing mass of heathen converts who were incapable of shaking off their sacerdotal prejudices and appreciating the free spirit of the Gospel. The latter view seems correct in the main, but requires some modification.

At all events so far as the evidence of extant writings goes, The there is no reason for supposing that sacerdotalism was especially earliest Jewish Christian rife among the Jewish converts. The Testaments of the Twelve ¹ Deut. xvii. 12; see Epist. 3, 4, 43, 59, 66.

² Though the words are ascribed to Solomon, the quotation comes from Ecclus. vii. 29, 31; see Epist. 3.

³ Acts xxiii. 4; see Epist. 3, 59, 66.

⁴ De Unit. Eccl. p. 83 (Fell), Epist. 3, 67, 69, 73.

⁵ The sacerdotal language in the Apostolical Constitutions is hardly less strong, while it is more systematic; but their date is uncertain and cannot well be placed earlier than Cyprian.

writings
contain no traces of sacerdotalism.

Patriarchs may be taken to represent one phase of Judaic Christianity; the Clementine writings exhibit another. In both alike there is an entire absence of sacerdotal views of the ministry. The former work indeed dwells at length on our Lord's office, as the descendant and heir of Levi¹, and alludes more than once to his institution of a new priesthood; but this priesthood is spiritual and comprehensive. Christ Himself is the High priest², and the sacerdotal office is described as being 'after the type of the Gentiles, extending to all the Gentiles³.' On the Christian ministry the writer is silent. In the Clementine Homilies the case is somewhat different, but the inference is still more obvious. Though the episcopate is regarded as the backbone of the Church, though the claims of the ministry are urged with great distinctness, no appeal is ever made to priestly sanctity as the ground of this exalted estimate⁴. Indeed the hold of the Levitical priesthood on the mind of the pious Jew must have been materially weakened at the Christian era by the development of the synagogue organization on the one hand, and by the ever growing influence of the learned and literary classes, the scribes and rabbis, on the other. The points on which the Judaizers of the apostolic age insist are the rite of circumcision, the distinction of meats, the observance of sabbaths, and the like. The necessity of a priesthood was not, or at least is not known to have been, part of their programme. Among the Essene Jews especially, who went so far as to repudiate the temple sacrifices, no great importance could have been attached to the Aaronic priesthood⁵: and after the Apostolic ages at all events, the most active Judaizers of the dispersion seem to have belonged to the Essene type. But indeed the overwhelming argument against ascribing the growth of sacerdotal views to Jewish influence lies in the fact, that there is a singular absence of distinct sacerdotalism during the first century and a half, when alone on any showing Judaism was powerful enough to impress itself on the belief of the Church at large.

¹ See Galatians p. 308.

² Ruben 6, Symeon 7, Levi 18.

³ Levi 8.

⁴ See the next note.

⁵ See Galatians pp. 310, 313. In the syzygies of the Clementine Homilies (ii. 16, 33) Aaron is opposed to Moses, the high-priest to the lawgiver, as the bad to the good, the false to the true, like Cain to Abel, Ishmael to Isaac, etc. In the later Recognitions the estimate of the high-priest's position is still unfavourable (i. 46, 48). Compare the statement in Justin, Dial. c. Tryph. 117.

It is therefore to Gentile feeling that this development must be ascribed. For the heathen familiar with auguries, lustrations, sacrifices, and depending on the intervention of some priest for all the manifold religious rites of the state, the club, and the family, the sacerdotal functions must have occupied a far larger space in the affairs of every day life, than for the Jew of the dispersion who of necessity dispensed and had no scruple at dispensing with priestly ministrations from one year's end to the other. With this presumption drawn from probability the evidence of fact accords. In Latin Christendom, as represented by the Church of Carthage, the germs of the sacerdotal idea appear first and soonest ripen to maturity. If we could satisfy ourselves of the early date of the Ancient Syriac Documents lately published, we should have discovered another centre from which this idea was propagated. And so far their testimony may perhaps be accepted. Syria was at least a soil where such a plant would thrive and luxuriate. In no country of the civilized world was sacerdotal authority among the heathen greater. The most important centres of Syrian Christianity, Antioch and Emesa, were also the cradles of strongly-marked sacerdotal religions which at different times made their influence felt throughout the Roman empire¹.

But though the spirit, which imported the idea into the Church of Christ and sustained it there, was chiefly due to Gentile education, yet its form was almost as certainly derived from the Old Testament. And this is the modification which needs to be made in the statement, in itself substantially true, that sacerdotalism must be traced to the influence of Heathen rather than of Jewish converts.

In the Apostolic writings we find the terms 'offering', 'sacrifice', applied to certain conditions and actions of the Christian life. These sacrifices or offerings are described as spiritual²; they consist of praise³, of faith⁴, of almsgiving⁵, of the devotion of the body⁶, of the conversion of unbelievers⁷, and the like. Thus whatever

Sacerdotalism was due to Gentile influences, but sought support in Old Testament analogies.

¹ The worship of the Syrian goddess of Antioch was among the most popular of oriental superstitions under the earlier Cæsars; the rites of the Sun-god of Emesa became fashionable under Elagabalus.

² 1 Pet. ii. 5.

³ Heb. xiii. 15.

⁴ Phil. ii. 17.

⁵ Acts xxiv. 17, Phil. iv. 18; comp. Heb. xiii. 16.

⁶ Rom. xii. 1.

⁷ Rom. xv. 16.

is dedicated to God's service may be included under this metaphor. In one passage also the image is so far extended, that the Apostolic writer speaks of an *altar*¹ pertaining to the spiritual service of the Christian Church. If on this noble Scriptural language a false superstructure has been reared, we have here only one instance out of many, where the truth has been impaired by transferring statements from the region of metaphor to the region of fact.

Offerings presented by the ministers.

These 'sacrifices' were very frequently the acts not of the individual Christian, but of the whole congregation. Such for instance were the offerings of public prayer and thanksgiving, or the collection of alms on the first day of the week, or the contribution of food for the agape, and the like. In such cases the congregation was represented by its minister, who thus acted as its mouthpiece and was said to 'present the offerings' to God. So the expression is used in the Epistle of St Clement of Rome². But in itself it involves no sacerdotal view. This ancient father regards the sacrifice or offering as the act of the whole Church performed through its presbyters. The minister is a priest in the same sense only in which each individual member of the congregation is a priest. When St Clement denounces those who usurp the functions of the presbyters, he reprobates their conduct not as an act of sacrilege but as a violation of order. He views the presbytery as an Apostolic ordinance, not as a sacerdotal caste.

Thus when this father speaks of the presbytery as 'presenting the offerings,' he uses an expression which, if not directly scriptural, is at least accordant with the tenour of Scripture. But from such language the transition to sacerdotal views was easy, where the sacerdotal spirit was rife. From being the act of the whole con-

¹ Heb. xiii. 10.

² Clem. Rom. 44 τοὺς ἀμέμπτως καὶ ὁσίως προσευγκόντας τὰ δῶρα. What sort of offerings are meant, may be gathered from other passages in Clement's Epistle; e.g. § 35 θυσία αἰνέσεως δοξάσει με, § 52 θύσον τῷ θεῷ θυσίαν αἰνέσεως καὶ ἀπόδος τῷ ὑψίστῳ τὰς εὐχάς σου, § 36 εὐρομεντὸ σωτήριον ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν τὸν ἀρχιερέα τῶν προσφορῶν ἡμῶν τὸν προστάτην καὶ βοηθὸν τῆς ἀσθενείας ἡμῶν, and § 41 ἕκαστος ὑμῶν, ἀδελφοί, ἐν τῷ ἰδίῳ τάγματι εὐχαριστεῖτω τῷ θεῷ ἐν ἀγαθῇ συνειδήσει ὑπάρχων, μὴ παρεκ-

βαίνων τὸν ὀρισμένον τῆς λειτουργίας αὐτοῦ κανόνα. Compare especially Heb. xiii. 10, 15, 16, ἔχουмен θυσιαστήριον ἐξ οὗ φαγεῖν οὐκ ἔχουσιν [ἐξουσίαν] οἱ τῇ σκηνῇ λατρεύοντες... Δι' αὐτοῦ οὖν ἀναφέρωμεν θυσίαν αἰνέσεως διὰ παντός τῷ θεῷ, τοῦτέστιν, καρπὸν χειλέων ὁμολογούντων τῷ ὀνόματι αὐτοῦ· τῆς δὲ εὐποιίας καὶ κοινωνίας μὴ ἐπιλανθάνεσθε, τοιαύταις γὰρ θυσίαις εὐarestεῖται ὁ θεός.

The doctrine of the early Church respecting 'sacrifice' is investigated by Höfling die Lehre der ältesten Kirche vom Opfer (Erlangen 1851).

gregation, the sacrifice came to be regarded as the act of the minister who officiated on its behalf.

And this transition was moreover facilitated by the growing tendency to apply the terms 'sacrifice' and 'offering' exclusively or chiefly to the eucharistic service. It may be doubted whether even as used by St Clement the expression may not have a special reference to this chief act of Christian dedication¹. It is quite certain that writers belonging to the generations next following, Justin Martyr and Irenæus for instance², employ the terms very frequently with this reference. We may here reserve the question in what sense the celebration of the Lord's supper may or may not be truly called a sacrifice. The point to be noticed at present is this; that the offering of the eucharist, being regarded as the one special act of sacrifice and appearing externally to the eye as the act of the officiating minister, might well lead to the minister being called a priest and then being thought a priest in some exclusive sense, where the religious bias was in this direction and as soon as the true position of the minister as the representative of the congregation was lost sight of.

But besides the metaphor or the analogy of the sacrifice, there was another point of resemblance also between the Jewish priesthood and the Christian ministry, which favoured the sacerdotal view of the latter. As soon as the episcopate and presbytery ceased to be regarded as sub-orders and were looked upon as distinct orders, the correspondence of the threefold ministry with the three ranks of the Special reference of the metaphor to the eucharist.

(2) Analogy of the three orders and the Levitical priesthood.

¹ On the whole however the language of the Epistle to the Hebrews quoted in the last note seems to be the best exponent of St Clement's meaning, as he very frequently follows this Apostolic writer. If εὐχαριστεῖτω has any special reference to the holy eucharist, as it may have, δῶρα will nevertheless be the alms and prayers and thanksgivings which accompanied the celebration of it. Compare Const. Apost. ii. 25 αἱ τότε θυσίαι νῦν εὐχαὶ καὶ δεήσεις καὶ εὐχαριστίαι, αἱ τότε ἀπαρχαὶ καὶ δεκάται καὶ ἀφαίρεματα καὶ δῶρα νῦν προσφοραὶ αἱ διὰ τῶν ὁσίων ἐπισκόπων προσφερόμεναι κυρίῳ κ.τ.λ., § 27 προσῆκει οὖν καὶ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί, τὰς θυσίας ὑμῶν ἡτοὶ προσφορὰς τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ προσφέρειν

ὡς ἀρχιερεὶ κ.τ.λ., § 34 τοὺς καρποὺς ὑμῶν καὶ τὰ ἔργα τῶν χειρῶν ὑμῶν εἰς εὐλογίαν ὑμῶν προσφέροντες αὐτῷ (sc. τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ)...τὰ δῶρα ὑμῶν διδόντες αὐτῷ ὡς ἱερεὶ θεοῦ, § 53 δῶρον δέ ἐστι θεῷ ἡ ἐκάστου προσευχή καὶ εὐχαριστία: comp. also § 35. These passages are quoted in Höfling, p. 27 sq.

² The chief passages in these fathers relating to Christian oblations are, Justin. Apol. i. 13 (p. 60), i. 65, 66, 67 (p. 97 sq.), Dial. 28, 29 (p. 246), 41 (p. 259 sq.), 116, 117 (p. 344 sq.), Iren. Hær. iv. cc. 17, 18, 19, v. 2. 3, [Fragm. 38, Stieren]. The place occupied by the eucharistic elements in their view of sacrifice will only be appreciated by reading the passages continuously.

Levitical priesthood could not fail to suggest itself. The solitary bishop represented the solitary high-priest; the principal acts of Christian sacrifice were performed by the presbyters, as the principal acts of Jewish sacrifice by the priests; and the attendant ministrations were assigned in the one case to the deacon, as in the other to the Levite. Thus the analogy seemed complete. To this correspondence however there was one grave impediment. The only High Priest under the Gospel recognised by the apostolic writings, is our Lord Himself. Accordingly in the Christian remains of the ages next succeeding this title is reserved as by right to Him¹; and though belonging to various schools, all writers alike abstain from applying it to the bishop. Yet the scruple was at length set aside. When it had become usual to speak of the presbyters as 'sacerdotes', the designation of 'pontifex' or 'summus sacerdos' for the bishop was far too convenient and too appropriate to be neglected.

Thus the analogy of the sacrifices and the correspondence of the threefold order supplied the material on which the sacerdotal feeling worked. And in this way, by the union of Gentile sentiment with the ordinances of the old dispensation, the doctrine of an exclusive priesthood found its way into the Church of Christ.

Question suggested.

How far is the language of the later Church justifiable? Can the Christian ministry be called a priesthood in any sense? and if so, in what sense? The historical investigation, which has suggested this question as its proper corollary, has also supplied the means of answering it.

Silence of the Apostolic writers.

Though different interpretations may be put upon the fact that the sacred writers throughout refrain from applying sacerdotal terms to the Christian ministry, I think it must be taken to signify this much at least, that this ministry, if a priesthood at all, is a priesthood of a type essentially different from the Jewish. Otherwise we shall be perplexed to explain why the earliest Christian teachers should have abstained from using those terms, which alone would adequately express to their hearers the one most important aspect of the ministerial office. It is often said in reply, that we have here a question not of words, but of things. This is undeniable: but words express things; and the silence of the Apostles still requires an explanation.

¹ See Clem. Rom. 36, 58, Polyc. Patr. Rub. 6, Sym. 7, etc., Clem. Recogn. Phil. 12, Ignat. Philad. 9, Test. xii i. 48.

However the interpretation of this fact is not far to seek. The Epistle to the Hebrews speaks at great length on priests and sacrifices in their Jewish and their Christian bearing. It is plain from this epistle, as it may be gathered also from other notices Jewish and Heathen, that the one prominent idea of the priestly office at this time was the function of offering sacrifice and thereby making atonement. Now this Apostolic writer teaches that all sacrifices had been consummated in the one Sacrifice, all priesthoods absorbed in the one Priest. The offering had been made once for all: and, as there were no more victims, there could be no more priests¹. All former priesthoods had borne witness to the necessity of a human mediator, and this sentiment had its satisfaction in the Person and Office of the Son of Man. All past sacrifices had proclaimed the need of an atoning death, and had their antitype, their realisation, their annulment, in the Cross of Christ. This explicit statement supplements and interprets the silence elsewhere noticed in the Apostolic writings.

Strictly accordant too with the general tenour of his argument is the language used throughout by the writer of this epistle. He speaks of Christian sacrifices, of a Christian altar; but the sacrifices are praise and thanksgiving and well-doing, the altar is the congregation assembled for common worship². If the Christian ministry

¹ The epistle deals mainly with the office of Christ as the antitype of the High Priest offering the annual sacrifice of atonement: and it has been urged that there is still room for a sacrificial priesthood under the High Priest. The whole argument however is equally applicable to the inferior priests: and in one passage at least it is directly so applied (x. 11, 12), 'And every priest standeth daily (καθ' ἡμέραν) ministering and offering the same sacrifices, etc.'; where the v.l. ἀρχιερεὺς for λερεὺς seems to have arisen from the desire to bring the verse into more exact conformity with what has gone before. This passage, it should be remembered, is the summing up and generalisation of the previous argument.

² It is surprising that some should have interpreted θυσιαστήριον in Heb. xiii. 10 of the Lord's table. There may be a doubt as to the exact significance of the term in this passage, but an actual altar is plainly not intended. This is shown by the context both before and after: e.g. ver. 9 the opposition of χάρις and βρώματα, ver. 15 the contrast implied in the mention of θυσία αἰνέσεως and καρπὸς χειλέων, and ver. 16 the naming εὐποία καὶ κοινωνία as the kind of sacrifice with which God is well pleased. The sense which I have assigned to it appears to suit the language of the context; while at the same time it accords with the Christian phraseology of succeeding ages. So Clem. Alex. Strom. vii. 6, p. 848, ἔστι were a sacerdotal office, if the holy eucharist were a sacerdotal act, in the same sense in which the Jewish priesthood and the Jewish sacrifice were sacerdotal, then his argument is faulty and his language misleading. Though dwelling at great length on the Christian counterparts to the Jewish priest, the Jewish altar, the Jewish sacrifice, he omits to mention the one office, the one place, the one act, which on this showing would be their truest and liveliest counterparts in the every-day worship of the Church of Christ. He has rejected these, and he has chosen instead moral and spiritual analogies for all these sacred types¹. Thus in what he has said and in what he has left unsaid alike, his language points to one and the same result.

Christian
ministers are priests in another sense;

If therefore the sacerdotal office be understood to imply the offering of sacrifices, then the Epistle to the Hebrews leaves no place

γούν τὸ παρ' ἡμῶν θυσιαστήριον ἐνταῦθα τὸ ἐπίγειον τὸ ἀθροισμα τῶν ταῖς εὐχαῖς ἀνακεμένων. The use of the word in the Ignatian Epistles also, though less obvious, seems to be substantially the same; Ephes. 4, Trall. 7, Magn. 7, Philad. 4; see Höfling Opfer etc., p. 32 sq. Similarly too Polycarp (§ 4) speaks of the body of widows as θυσιαστήριον Θεοῦ.

[It has been suggested to me by several friends independently, since the first edition appeared, that ἔχομεν θυσιαστήριον should be understood 'we Jews have an altar,' and that the writer of the epistle is here bringing an example from the old dispensation itself (the sin-offering on the day of atonement) in which the sacrifices were not eaten. This interpretation is attractive, but it seems to me inadequate to explain the whole context (though it suits parts well enough), and is ill adapted to individual expressions (e.g. θυσιαστήριον where θυσία would be expected, and οἱ τῇ σκηνῇ λατρεύοντες which thus becomes needlessly emphatic), not to mention that the first person plural and the present tense ἔχομεν seem unnatural where the author and his readers are spoken of, not as actual Christians, but as former Jews. In fact the analogy of the sacrifice on the day of atonement appears not to be introduced till the next verse, ὧν γὰρ εἰσφέρεται ζώων κ.τ.λ.]

Some interpreters again, from a comparison of 1 Cor. ix. 13 with 1 Cor. x. 18, have inferred that St Paul recognises the designation of the Lord's table as an altar. On the contrary it is a speaking fact, that in both passages he avoids using the term of the Lord's table, though the language of the context might readily have suggested it to him, if he had considered it appropriate. Nor does the argument in either case require or encourage such an inference. In 1 Cor. ix. 13, 14, the Apostle writes 'Know ye not that they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar? Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel.' The point of resemblance in the two cases is the holding a sacred office: but the ministering on the altar is predicated only of the former. So also in 1 Cor. x. 18 sq., the altar is named as common to Jews and Heathens, but the table only as common to Christians and Heathens; i.e. the holy eucharist is a banquet but it is not a sacrifice (in the Jewish or Heathen sense of sacrifice).

¹ For the passages see above, pp. 259, 260.

for a Christian priesthood. If on the other hand the word be taken in a wider and looser acceptation, it cannot well be withheld from the ministry of the Church of Christ. Only in this case the meaning of the term should be clearly apprehended: and it might have been better if the later Christian vocabulary had conformed to the silence of the Apostolic writers, so that the possibility of confusion would have been avoided.

According to this broader meaning, the priest may be defined as one who represents God to man and man to God. It is moreover indispensable that he should be called by God, for no man 'taketh this honour to himself.' The Christian ministry satisfies both these conditions.

Of the fulfilment of the latter the only evidence within our cognisance is the fact that the minister is called according to a divinely appointed order. If the preceding investigation be substantially correct, the three-fold ministry can be traced to Apostolic direction; and short of an express statement we can possess no better assurance of a Divine appointment or at least a Divine sanction. If the facts do not allow us to unchurch other Christian communities differently organized, they may at least justify our jealous adhesion to a polity derived from this source.

And while the mode of appointment satisfies the one condition, the nature of the office itself satisfies the other; for it exhibits the doubly representative character which is there laid down.

The Christian minister is God's ambassador to men: he is charged with the ministry of reconciliation; he unfolds the will of heaven; he declares in God's name the terms on which pardon is offered; and he pronounces in God's name the absolution of the penitent. This last mentioned function has been thought to invest the ministry with a distinctly sacerdotal character. Yet it is very closely connected with the magisterial and pastoral duties of the office, and is only priestly in the same sense in which they are priestly. As empowered to declare the conditions of God's grace, he is empowered also to proclaim the consequences of their acceptance. But throughout his office is representative and not vicarial¹. He does not interpose between God and man in such a way that direct communion with God is superseded on the one hand, or that his own mediation becomes indispensable on the other.

¹ The distinction is made in Maurice's Kingdom of Christ, II. p. 216.

and as representing man to God.

Again the Christian minister is the representative of man to God—of the congregation primarily, of the individual indirectly as a member of the congregation. The alms, the prayers, the thanksgivings of the community are offered through him. Some representation is as necessary in the Church as it is in a popular government: and the nature of the representation is not affected by the fact that the form of the ministry has been handed down from Apostolic times and may well be presumed to have a Divine sanction. For here again it must be borne in mind that the minister's function is representative without being vicarial. He is a priest, as the mouthpiece, the delegate, of a priestly race. His acts are not his own, but the acts of the congregation. Hence too it will follow that, viewed on this side as on the other, his function cannot be absolute and indispensable. It may be a general rule, it may be under ordinary circumstances a practically universal law, that the highest acts of congregational worship shall be performed through the principal officers of the congregation. But an emergency may arise when the spirit and not the letter must decide. The Christian ideal will then interpose and interpret our duty. The higher ordinance of the universal priesthood will overrule all special limitations. The layman will assume functions which are otherwise restricted to the ordained minister¹.

The prevalence of sacerdotalism considered.

Yet it would be vain to deny that a very different conception prevailed for many centuries in the Church of Christ. The Apostolic ideal was set forth, and within a few generations forgotten. The vision was only for a time and then vanished. A strictly sacerdotal view of the ministry superseded the broader and more spiritual conception of their priestly functions. From being the representatives, the ambassadors, of God, they came to be regarded His vicars. Nor is this the only instance where a false conception has seemed to maintain a long-lived domination over the Church. For some centuries the idea of the Holy Roman Empire enthralled the minds of men. For a still longer period the idea of the Holy Roman See held undisturbed sway over Western Christendom. To those who take a comprehensive view of the progress of Christianity, even these more lasting obscurations of the truth will present no serious difficulty. They will not suffer themselves to be blinded thereby to the true nobility of Ecclesiastical History; they will not fail to see that, even in the seasons of her deepest degradation, the Church was still the regenerator of society, the upholder of right principle against selfish interest, the visible witness of the Invisible God; they will thankfully confess that, notwithstanding the pride and selfishness and dishonour of individual rulers, notwithstanding the imperfections and errors of special institutions and developments, yet in her continuous history the Divine promise has been signally realised, 'Lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the world.'

¹ For the opinion of the early Church on this subject see especially the passage of Tertullian quoted above, p. 254.

II.

ST PAUL AND SENECA.

Seneca traditionally accounted a Christian.

THE earliest of the Latin fathers, Tertullian, writing about a century and a half after the death of Seneca, speaks of this philosopher as 'often our own'.¹ Some two hundred years later St Jerome, having occasion to quote him, omits the qualifying adverb and calls him broadly 'our own Seneca'.² Living midway between these two writers, Lactantius points out several coincidences with the teaching of the Gospel in the writings of Seneca, whom nevertheless he styles 'the most determined of the Roman Stoics'.³ From the age of St Jerome, Seneca was commonly regarded as standing on the very threshold of the Christian Church, even if he had not actually passed within its portals. In one Ecclesiastical Council at least, held at Tours in the year 567, his authority is quoted with a deference generally accorded only to fathers of the Church.⁴ And even to the present day in the marionette plays of his native Spain St Seneca takes his place by the side of St Peter and St Paul in the representations of our Lord's passion.⁵

Comparing the language of Tertullian and Jerome, we are able to measure the growth of this idea in the interval of time which separates the two. One important impulse however, which it received meanwhile, must not be overlooked. When St Jerome wrote,

¹ Tertull. de Anim. 20 'Seneca sæpe noster.'

² Adv. Jovin. i. 49 (II. p. 318) 'Scripserunt Aristoteles et Plutarchus et noster Seneca de matrimonio libros etc.'

³ Div. Inst. i. 5 'Annæus Seneca qui ex Romanis vel acerrimus Stoicus fuit': comp. ii. 9, vi. 24, etc.

⁴ Labbæi Concilia v. p. 856 (Paris, 1671) 'Sicut ait Seneca pessimum in eo vitium esse qui in id quo insanit cæteros putat furere.' See Fleury Saint Paul et Sénèque i. p. 14.

⁵ So Fleury states, i. p. 289.

the Christianity of Seneca seemed to be established on a sounder basis than mere critical inference. A correspondence, purporting to have passed between the heathen philosopher and the Apostle of the Gentiles, was then in general circulation; and, without either affirming or denying its genuineness, this father was thereby induced to give a place to Seneca in his catalogue of Christian writers¹. If the letters of Paul and Seneca, which have come down to us, are the same with those read by him (and there is no sufficient reason for doubting the identity²), it is strange that he could for a moment have entertained the question of their authenticity. The poverty of thought and style, the errors in chronology and history, and the whole conception of the relative positions of the Stoic philosopher and the Christian Apostle, betray clearly the hand of a forger. Yet this correspondence has without doubt been mainly instrumental in fixing the belief on the mind of the later Church, as it was even sufficient to induce some hesitation in St Jerome himself. How far the known history and the extant writings of either favour this idea, it will be the object of the present essay to examine. The enquiry into the historical connexion between these two great contemporaries will naturally expand into an investigation of the relations, whether of coincidence or of contrast, between the systems of which they were the respective exponents. And, as Stoicism was the only philosophy which could even pretend to rival Christianity in the earlier ages of the Church, such an investigation ought not to be uninteresting³.

The forged correspondence of Paul and Seneca.

Like all the later systems of Greek philosophy, Stoicism was the offspring of despair. Of despair in religion: for the old mythologies had ceased to command the belief or influence the conduct of men. Of despair in politics: for the Macedonian conquest had broken the independence of the Hellenic states and stamped out the last sparks of corporate life. Of despair even in philosophy itself: for the older

Later philosophies the children of despair.

¹ Vir. Illustr. 12 'Quem non ponerem in catalogo sanctorum, nisi me illæ epistolæ provocarent quæ leguntur a plurimis, Pauli ad Senecam et Senecæ ad Paulum.'

² See the note at the end of this dissertation.

³ In the sketch, which I have given, of the relation of Stoicism to the circumstances of the time and to other earlier and contemporary systems of philosophy, I am greatly indebted to the account in Zeller's Philosophie der Griechen Th. III. Abth. 1 Die nach-aristotelische Philosophie (2nd ed. 1865), which it is impossible to praise too highly. See also the instructive essay of Sir A. Grant on 'The Ancient Stoics' in his edition of Aristotle's Ethics I. p. 243 sq. (2nd ed.).

thinkers, though they devoted their lives to forging a golden chain which should link earth to heaven, appeared now to have spent their strength in weaving ropes of sand. The sublime intuitions of Plato had been found too vague and unsubstantial, and the subtle analyses of Aristotle too hard and cold, to satisfy the natural craving of man for some guidance which should teach him how to live and to die.

Greece prepared for new systems of philosophy.

Thus the soil of Greece had been prepared by the uprootal of past interests and associations for fresh developments of religious and philosophic thought. When political life became impossible, the moral faculties of man were turned inward upon himself and concentrated on the discipline of the individual soul. When speculation had been cast aside as barren and unprofitable, the search was directed towards some practical rule or rules which might take its place. When the gods of Hellas had been deposed and dishonoured, some new powers must be created or discovered to occupy their vacant throne.

Coincidences and contrasts of the Epicurean and Stoic philosophies.

Stimulated by the same need, Epicurus and Zeno strove in different ways to solve the problem which the perplexities of their age presented. Both alike, avoiding philosophy in the proper sense of the term, concentrated their energies on ethics: but the one took happiness, the other virtue, as his supreme good, and made it the starting point of his ethical teaching. Both alike contrasted with the older masters in building their systems on the needs of the individual and not of the state: but the one strove to satisfy the cravings of man, as a being intended by nature for social life, by laying stress on the claims and privileges of friendship, the other by expanding his sphere of duty and representing him as a citizen of the world or even of the universe. Both alike paid a certain respect to the waning beliefs of their day: but the one without denying the existence of the gods banished them from all concern in the affairs of men, while the other, transforming and utilising the creations of Hellenic mythology, identified them with the powers of the physical world. Both alike took conformity to nature as their guiding maxim: but nature with the one was interpreted to mean the equable balance of all the impulses and faculties of man, with the other the absolute supremacy of the reason, as the ruling principle of his being. And lastly, both alike sought refuge from the turmoil and confusion of the age in the inward calm and composure of the soul. If Serenity

(ἀραξία) was the supreme virtue of the one, her twin sister Passionlessness (ἀπαθία) was the sovereign principle of the other.

These two later developments of Greek philosophy both took root and grew to maturity in Greek soil. But, while the seed of the one was strictly Hellenic, the other was derived from an Oriental stock. Epicurus was a Greek of the Greeks, a child of Athenian parents. Zeno, on the other hand, a native of Citium, a Phœnician colony in Crete, was probably of Shemitic race, for he is commonly styled 'the Phœnician'.¹ Babylon, Tyre, Sidon, Carthage, reared some of his most illustrious successors. Cilicia, Phrygia, Rhodes, were the homes of others. Not a single Stoic of any name was a native of Greece proper.²

To Eastern affinities Stoicism was without doubt largely indebted for the features which distinguished it from other schools of Greek philosophy. To this fact may be ascribed the intense moral earnestness which was its most honourable characteristic. If the later philosophers generally, as distinguished from the earlier, busied themselves with ethics rather than metaphysics, with the Stoics this was the one absorbing passion. The contrast between the light reckless gaiety of the Hellenic spirit and the stern, unbending, almost fanatical moralism of the followers of Zeno is as complete as could well be imagined. The ever active conscience which is the glory, and the proud self-consciousness which is the reproach, of the Stoic school are alike alien to the temper of ancient Greece. Stoicism breathes rather the religious atmosphere of the East, which fostered on the one hand the inspired devotion of a David or an Isaiah, and on the other the self-mortification and self-righteousness of an Egyptian therapeuté or an Indian fakir. A recent writer, to whom we are indebted for a highly appreciative account of the Stoic school, describes this new phase of Greek philosophy, which we have been reviewing and of which Stoicism was the truest exponent, as 'the transition to modernism'.³ It might with greater truth be described as the contact of Oriental influences with the world of classical thought.

¹ See Diog. Laert. vii. 3, where Crates addresses him τί φεύγεις, ὦ Φοινικίδιον; comp. § 15 Φοινισσαν; § 25 Φοινικικῶς; § 30 εἰ δὲ πάτρα Φοινισσα τίς δ' ἄνθρωπος. We are told also § 7 ἀντροποιῶντο δ' αὐτοῦ καὶ οἱ ἐν Σιδῶνι Κιτιεῖς.

So again ii. 114 Ζήνωνα τὸν Φοινίκα.

² See below, pp. 297, 301.

³ Grant, l. c. p. 243. Sir A. Grant however fully recognises the eastern element in Stoicism (p. 246).

Union of oriental with classical thought.

Stoicism was in fact the earliest offspring of the union between the religious consciousness of the East and the intellectual culture of the West. The recognition of the claims of the individual soul, the sense of personal responsibility, the habit of judicial introspection, in short the subjective view of ethics, were in no sense new, for they are known to have held sway over the mind of the chosen people from the earliest dawn of their history as a nation. But now for the first time they presented themselves at the doors of Western civilization and demanded admission. The occasion was eminently favourable. The conquests of Alexander, which rendered the fusion of the East and West for the first time possible, also evoked the moral need which they had thus supplied the means of satisfying. By the overthrow of the state the importance of the individual was enhanced. In the failure of political relations, men were thrown back on their inward resources and led to examine their moral wants and to educate their moral faculties.

Exclusive attention to ethics.

It was in this way that the Eastern origin of Stoicism combined with the circumstances and requirements of the age to give it an exclusively ethical character. The Stoics did, it is true, pay some little attention to physical questions: and one or two leading representatives of the school also contributed towards the systematic treatment of logic. But consciously and expressly they held these branches of study to be valueless except in their bearing on moral questions. Representing philosophy under the image of a field, they compared physics to the trees, ethics to the fruit for which the trees exist, and logic to the wall or fence which protects the enclosure¹. Or again, adopting another comparison, they likened logic to the shell of an egg, physics to the white, and ethics to the yolk². As the fundamental maxim of Stoical ethics was conformity to nature, and as therefore it was of signal importance to ascertain man's relaneglect of physics

Practical

¹ Diog. Laert. vii. 40, Philo de Agric. § 3 p. 302 M. See also de Mut. Nom. § 10, p. 589 M, where Philo after giving this comparison says οὕτως οὖν ἔφασαν καὶ ἐν φιλοσοφίᾳ δεῖν τὴν τε φυσικὴν καὶ λογικὴν πραγματεῖαν ἐπὶ τὴν ἠθικὴν ἀναφέρεισθαι κ.τ.λ.

² Sext. Emp. vii. 17. On the other hand Diog. Laert. l. c. makes ethics the white and physics the yolk. See Zeller l. c. p. 57, and Ritter and Preller Hist.

Phil. § 396. But this is a matter of little moment; for, whichever form of the metaphor be adopted, the ethical bearing of physics is put prominently forward. Indeed as ancient naturalists were not agreed about the respective functions of the yolk and the white, the application of the metaphor must have been influenced by this uncertainty. The inferiority of logic appears in all the comparisons.

tion to the world around, it might have been supposed that the study of physics would have made great progress in the hands of Zeno's disciples. But, pursuing it for the most part without any love for the study itself and pursuing it moreover only to support certain foregone ethical conclusions, they instituted few independent researches and discovered no hidden truths. To logic they assigned a still meaner part. The place which it occupies in the images already mentioned and deprecation of logic clearly points to their conception of its functions. It was not so much a means of arriving at truth, as an expedient for protecting truth already attained from external assaults. An extreme representative of the school went so far as to say that 'Of subjects of philosophical investigation some pertain to us, some have no relation to us, and some are beyond us: ethical questions belong to the first class; dialectics to the second, for they contribute nothing towards the amendment of life; and physics to the third, for they are beyond the reach of knowledge and are profitless withal!.' This was the genuine spirit of the school², though other adherents were more guarded in their statements. Physical science is conversant in experiment; logical science in argumentation. But the Stoic was impatient alike of the one and the other; for he was essentially a philosopher of intuitions.

And here again the Oriental spirit manifested itself. The Greek moralist was a reasoner: the Oriental for the most part, whether inspired or uninspired, a prophet. Though they might clothe their systems of morality in a dialectical garb the Stoic teachers belonged essentially to this latter class. Even Chrysippus, the great logician and controversialist of the sect, is reported to have told his master Cleanthes, that 'he only wanted the doctrines, and would himself find out the proofs³.' This saying has been condemned as 'betraying a want of earnestness as to the truth⁴'; but I can hardly think that it ought to be regarded in this light. Flippant though it would appear at first sight, it may well express the intense faith in intuition, or what I have called the prophetic⁵ spirit, which distinguishes the spirit of the school.

Prophetic

¹ Ariston in Diog. Laert. vii. 160, Stob. Flor. lxxx. 7. See Zeller l. c. p. 50.

² 'Quicquid legeris ad mores statim referas,' says Seneca Ep. Mor. lxxxix. See the whole of the preceding epistle.

³ Diog. Laert. vii. 179 πολλὰ κῆς ἔλεγε μόνῃς τῆς τῶν δογμάτων διδασκαλίας χρῆξιν τὰς δ' ἀποδείξεις αὐτὸς εὐρήσειν.

⁴ Grant l. c. p. 253.

⁵ Perhaps the use of this term needs some apology; but I could not find school. Like the other Stoics, Chrysippus had no belief in argumentation, but welcomed the highest truths as intuitively apprehended. Logic was to him, as to them, only the egg-shell which protected the germ of future life, the fence which guarded the fruitful garden. As a useful weapon of defence against assailants and nothing more, it was regarded by the most perfect master of the science which the school produced. The doctrines did not derive their validity from logical reasoning: they were absolute and self-contained. Once stated, they must commend themselves to the innate faculty, when not clouded by ignoble prejudices of education or degrading habits of life.

Parallel to Christianity in the westward progress of Stoicism.

Influence of Greece

and of Rome.

But though the germ of Stoicism was derived from the East, its systematic development and its practical successes were attained by transplantation into a western soil. In this respect its career, as it travelled westward, presents a rough but instructive parallel to the progress of the Christian Church. The fundamental ideas, derived from Oriental parentage, were reduced to a system and placed on an intellectual basis by the instrumentality of Greek thought. The schools of Athens and of Tarsus did for Stoicism the same work which was accomplished for the doctrines of the Gospel by the controversial writings of the Greek fathers and the authoritative decrees of the Greek councils. Zeno and Chrysippus and Panætius are the counterparts of an Origen, an Athanasius, or a Basil. But, while the systematic expositions of the Stoic tenets were directly or indirectly the products of Hellenic thought and were matured on Greek soil, the scene of its greatest practical manifestations was elsewhere. It must be allowed that the Roman representatives of the school were very inadequate exponents of the Stoic philosophy regarded as a speculative system: but just as Latin Christianity adopted from her Greek sister the creeds which she herself was incapable of framing, and built thereupon an edifice of moral influence and social organization far more stately and enduring, so also when naturalised in its Latin home Stoicism became a motive power in the world, and exhibited those practical results to which its renown is chiefly due.

a better. I meant to express by it the characteristic of enunciating moral truths as authoritative, independently of processes of reasoning. The Stoic, being a pantheist and having no dis-tingent belief in a personal God, was not a prophet in the ordinary sense, but only as being the exponent of his own inner consciousness, which was his supreme authority.

This comparison is instituted between movements hardly comparable in their character or their effects; and it necessarily stops short of the incorporation of the Teutonic nations. But the distinctive feature of Christianity as a Divine revelation and of the Church as a Divine institution does not exempt them from the ordinary laws of progress: and the contrasts between the doctrines of the Porch and the Gospel, to which I shall have to call attention later, are rendered only the more instructive by observing this parallelism in their outward career.

It is this latest or Roman period of Stoic philosophy which has chiefly attracted attention, not only because its practical influence then became most manifest, but also because this stage of its history alone is adequately illustrated by extant writings of the school. On the Christian student moreover it has a special claim; for he will learn an instructive lesson in the conflicts or coincidences of Stoicism with the doctrines of the Gospel and the progress of the Church. And of this stage in its history Seneca is without doubt the most striking representative.

Seneca was strictly a contemporary of St Paul. Born probably within a few years of each other, the Christian Apostle and the Stoic philosopher both died about the same time and both fell victims of the same tyrant's rage. Here, it would have seemed, the parallelism must end. One might indeed indulge in an interesting speculation whether Seneca, like so many other Stoics, had not Shemitic blood in his veins. The whole district from which he came was thickly populated with Phœnician settlers either from the mother country or from her great African colony. The name of his native province Bætica, the name of his native city Corduba, are both said to be Phœnician. Even his own name, though commonly derived from the Latin, may perhaps have a Shemitic origin; for it is borne by a Jew of Palestine early in the second century¹. This however is thrown out merely as a conjecture. Otherwise the Stoic philosopher from the extreme West and the Christian Apostle from the extreme East of the Roman dominions would seem very unlikely to present any features in common. The one a wealthy courtier and

¹ The name Σεππεκᾶς or Σερεκᾶς occurs in the list of the early bishops of Jerusalem, Euseb. H. E. iv. 5. The word is usually connected with 'senex,' Curtius Griech. Etym. § 428.

Coincidences of thought and language.

statesman settled in the metropolis, the other a poor and homeless preacher wandering in distant provinces, they were separated not less by the manifold influences of daily life than by the circumstances of their birth and early education. Yet the coincidences of thought and even of language between the two are at first sight so striking, that many writers have been at a loss to account for them, except on the supposition of personal intercourse, if not of direct plagiarism¹. The inference indeed appears unnecessary: but the facts are remarkable enough to challenge investigation, and I propose now to consider their bearing.

Though general resemblances of sentiment and teaching will carry less weight, as compared with the more special coincidences of language and illustration, yet the data would be incomplete without taking the former into account². Thus we might imagine ourselves

¹ The connexion of St Paul and Seneca has been a favourite subject with French writers. The most elaborate of recent works is A. Fleury's Saint Paul et Sénèque (Paris 1853), in which the author attempts to show that Seneca was a disciple of St Paul. It is interesting and full of materials, but extravagant and unsatisfactory. Far more critical is C. Aubertin's Etude Critique sur les rapports supposés entre Sénèque et Saint Paul (Paris 1857), which appears intended as an answer to Fleury. Aubertin shows that many of the parallels are fallacious, and that many others prove nothing, since the same sentiments occur in earlier writers. At the same time he fails to account for other more striking coincidences. It must be added also that he is sometimes very careless in his statements. For instance (p. 186) he fixes an epoch by coupling together the names of Celsus and Julian, though they are separated by nearly two centuries. Fleury's opinion is combated also in Baur's articles Seneca und Paulus in the Zeitschrift für Wissenschaftliche Theologie i. p. 161 sq. (1858). Among other recent French works in which Seneca's obligations to Christianity are maintained, may be named those of Troplong, De l'influence du Christianisme sur le droit civil des Romains p. 76 (Paris 1843), and C. Schmidt

Essai historique sur la société civile dans le monde Romain et sur sa transformation par le Christianisme (Paris 1853). The opposite view is taken by C. Martha Les Moralistes sous l'Empire Romain (2^{me} ed. Paris 1866). Le Stoïcisme à Rome by P. Montée (Paris, 1865), is a readable little book, but does not throw any fresh light on the subject. Seekers after God, a popular and instructive work by the Rev. F. W. Farrar, appeared about the same time as my first edition. The older literature of the subject will be found in Fleury i. p. 2 sq. In reading through Seneca I have been able to add some striking coincidences to those collected by Fleury and others, while at the same time I have rejected a vast number as insufficient or illusory.

² No account is here taken of certain direct reproductions of Christian teaching which some writers have found in Seneca. Thus the doctrine of the Trinity is supposed to be enunciated by these words 'Quisquis formator universi fuit, sive ille Deus est potens omnium, sive incorporalis ratio ingentium operum artifex, sive divinus spiritus per omnia maxima ac minima aequali intentione diffusus, sive fatum et immutabilis causarum inter se cohærentium series' (ad Helv. matr. 8). Fleury (i. p. 97), who holds this view, significantly ends his quotation with 'diffusus, omit- listening to a Christian divine, when we read in the pages of Seneca that 'God made the world because He is good,' and that 'as the good never grudges anything good, He therefore made everything the best possible'. Yet if we are tempted to draw a hasty inference from this parallel, we are checked by remembering that it is a quotation from Plato. Again Seneca maintains that 'in worshipping the gods, the first thing is to believe in the gods,' and that 'he who has copied them has worshipped them adequately'; and on this duty of imitating the gods he insists frequently and emphatically³. But here too his sentiment is common to Plato and many other of the older philosophers. 'No man,' he says elsewhere, 'is good without God'. 'Between good men and the gods there exists a friendship—a friendship do I say? nay, rather a relationship and a resemblance'; and using still stronger language he speaks of men as the children of God⁶. But here again he is treading in the footsteps of the older Stoic teachers, and his very language is anticipated in the words quoted by St Paul from Cleanthes or Aratus, 'We too His offspring are'.

Goodness of God.

Relation of man to God.

From the recognition of God's fatherly relation to man important consequences flow. In almost Apostolic language Seneca describes the trials and sufferings of good men as the chastisements of a wise and beneficent parent: 'God has a fatherly mind towards good men and loves them stoutly; and, saith He, Let them be harassed with toils, with pains, with losses, that they may gather true strength'. 'Those therefore whom God approves, whom He Fatherly chastisement of God.

ting the clause 'sive fatum, etc.' Thus again some writers have found an allusion to the Christian sacraments in Seneca's language, 'Ad hoc sacramentum adactisumus ferremortalia,' de Vit. beat. 15 (comp. Ep. Mor. lxxv). Such criticisms are mere plays on words and do not even deserve credit for ingenuity. On the other hand Seneca does mention the doctrine of guardian angels or demons; 'Sepone in presentia quæ quibusdam placent, unicuique nostrum pædagogum dari deum,' Ep. Mor. cx; but, as Aubertin shows (p. 284 sq.), this was a tenet common to many earlier philosophers; and in the very passage quoted Seneca himself adds, 'Ita tamen hoc seponas volo, ut memineris majores nostros, qui crediderunt, Stoicos fuisse, singulis enim et Genium et Junonem dederunt.' See Zeller, p. 297 sq.

¹ Ep. Mor. lxxv. 10.

² Ep. Mor. xcv. 50.

³ de Vit. beat. 15 'Habebit illud in animo vetus præceptum: deum sequere'; de Benef. iv. 25 'Propositum est nobis secundum rerum naturam vivere et deorum exemplum sequi'; ib. i. 1 'Hos sequamur duces quantum humana imbecillitas patitur'; Ep. Mor. cxxiv. 23 'Animus emendatus ac purus, æmulator dei.'

⁴ Ep. Mor. xli, comp. lxxiii.

⁵ de Prov. i; comp. Nat. Quæst. prol., etc.

⁶ de Prov. i, de Benef. ii. 29.

⁷ Acts xvii. 28.

⁸ de Prov. 2.

loves, them He hardens, He chastises, He disciplines'.¹ Hence the 'sweet uses of adversity' find in him an eloquent exponent. 'Nothing,' he says, quoting his friend Demetrius, 'seems to me more unhappy than the man whom no adversity has ever befallen'.² 'The life free from care and from any buffetings of fortune is a dead sea'.³ Hence too it follows that resignation under adversity becomes a plain duty. 'It is best to endure what you cannot mend, and without murmuring to attend upon God, by whose ordering all things come to pass. He is a bad soldier who follows his captain complaining'.⁴

The indwelling spirit of God.

Still more strikingly Christian is his language, when he speaks of God who 'is near us, is with us, is within,' of 'a holy spirit residing in us, the guardian and observer of our good and evil deeds'.⁵ 'By what other name,' he asks, 'can we call an upright and good and great mind except (a) god lodging in a human body'?' The spark of a heavenly flame has alighted on the hearts of men.⁷ They are associates with, are members of God. The mind came from God and yearns towards God.⁸

From this doctrine of the abiding presence of a divine spirit the practical inferences are not less weighty. 'So live with men, as if God saw you; so speak with God, as if men heard you'.⁹ 'What profits it, if any matter is kept secret from men? nothing is hidden from God'.¹⁰ 'The gods are witnesses of everything'.¹¹

Universal dominion
of sin,

But even more remarkable perhaps, than this devoutness of tone in which the duties of man to God arising out of his filial relation are set forth, is the energy of Seneca's language, when he paints the internal struggle of the human soul and prescribes the discipline needed for its release. The soul is bound in a prison-house, is weighed down by a heavy burden.¹² Life is a continual warfare.¹³

¹ de Prov. 4; comp. ib. § 1.

² de Prov. 3.

³ Ep. Mor. lxxvii. This again is a saying of Demetrius.

⁴ Ep. Mor. cvii; comp. ib. lxxvi.

⁵ Ep. Mor. xli; comp. ib. lxxiii.

⁶ Ep. Mor. xxxi. The want of the definite article in Latin leaves the exact meaning uncertain; but this uncertainty is suited to the vagueness of Stoic theology. In Ep. Mor. xli Seneca quotes the words 'Quis deus, incertum est; habitat Deus' (Virg. Æn. viii. 352), and applies them to this inward monitor.

⁷ de Otio 5.

⁸ Ep. Mor. xcii.

⁹ Ep. Mor. x.

¹⁰ Ep. Mor. lxxxi; comp. Fragm. 14 (in Lactant. vi. 24).

¹¹ Ep. Mor. cii.

¹² Ad Helv. matr. 11, Ep. Mor. lxxv, cii.

¹³ See below, p. 285, note 9.

From the terrors of this struggle none escape unscathed. The Apostolic doctrine that all have sinned has an apparent counterpart in the teaching of Seneca; 'We shall ever be obliged to pronounce the same sentence upon ourselves, that we are evil, that we have been evil, and (I will add it unwillingly) that we shall be evil¹.' 'Every vice exists in every man, though every vice is not prominent in each².' 'If we would be upright judges of all things, let us first persuade ourselves of this, that not one of us is without fault³.' 'These are vices of mankind and not of the times. No age has been free from fault⁴.' 'Capital punishment is appointed for all, and this by a most righteous ordinance⁵.' 'No one will be found who can acquit himself; and any man calling himself innocent has regard to the witness, not to his own conscience⁶.' 'Every day, every hour,' he exclaims, 'shows us our nothingness, and reminds us by some new token, when we forget our frailty⁷.' Thus Seneca, in common with the Stoic school generally, lays great stress on the office of the conscience, as 'making cowards of us all.' 'It reproaches them,' he says, 'and shows them to themselves⁸.' 'The first and greatest punishment of sinners is the fact of having sinned⁹.' 'The beginning of safety is the knowledge of sin.' 'I think this,' he adds, 'an admirable saying of Epicurus¹⁰.'

Office of the conscience.

Hence also follows the duty of strict self-examination. 'As far as thou canst, accuse thyself, try thyself: discharge the office, first of a prosecutor, then of a judge, lastly of an intercessor¹¹.' Accordingly he relates at some length how, on lying down to rest every night, he follows the example of Sextius and reviews his shortcomings during the day: 'When the light is removed out of sight, and my wife, who is by this time aware of my practice, is now silent, I pass the whole

Self-examination and confession.

¹ de Benef. i. 10.

² de Benef. iv. 27.

³ de Ira ii. 28; comp. ad Polyb. 11, Ep. Mor. xlii.

⁴ Ep. Mor. xvii.

⁵ Qu. Nat. ii. 29.

⁶ de Ira i. 14.

⁷ Ep. Mor. ci.

⁸ Ep. Mor. xvii. 15.

⁹ ib. 14.

¹⁰ Ep. Mor. xxviii. 9 'Initium est salutis notitia peccati.' For convenience I have translated peccatum here as elsewhere by 'sin'; but it will be evident at once that in a saying of Epicurus, whose gods were indifferent to the doings of men, the associations connected with the word must be very different. See the remarks below, p. 294. Fleury (i. p. 111) is eloquent on this coincidence, but omits to mention that it occurs in a saying of Epicurus. His argument crumbles into dust before our eyes, when the light of this fact is admitted.

¹¹ ib. 10.

of my day under examination, and I review my deeds and words. I hide nothing from myself, I pass over nothing¹. Similarly he describes the good man as one who 'has opened out his conscience to the gods, and always lives as if in public, fearing himself more than others²'. In the same spirit too he enlarges on the advantage of having a faithful friend, 'a ready heart into which your every secret can be safely deposited, whose privacy you need fear less than your own³'; and urges again and again the duty of meditation and self-converse⁴, quoting on this head the saying of Epicurus, 'Then retire within thyself most, when thou art forced to be in a crowd⁵'.

Duties towards others.

Nor, when we pass from the duty of individual self-discipline to the social relations of man, does the Stoic philosophy, as represented by Seneca, hold a less lofty tone. He acknowledges in almost Scriptural language the obligation of breaking bread with the hungry⁶. 'You must live for another,' he writes, 'if you would live for yourself⁷'. 'For what purpose do I get myself a friend?' he exclaims with all the extravagance of Stoic self-renunciation, 'That I may have one for whom I can die, one whom I can follow into exile, one whom I can shield from death at the cost of my own life⁸'. 'I will so live,' he says elsewhere, 'as if I knew that I was born for others, and will give thanks to nature on this score⁹'.

Moreover these duties of humanity extend to all classes and ranks in the social scale. The slave has claims equally with the freeman, the base-born equally with the noble. 'They are slaves, you urge; nay, they are men. They are slaves; nay, they are comrades. They are slaves; nay, they are humble friends. They are slaves; nay, they are fellow-slaves, if you reflect that fortune has the same power over both.' 'Let some of them,' he adds, 'dine with you, because they are worthy; others, that they may become worthy.' 'He is a slave, you say. Yet perchance he is free in spirit. He is a slave. Will this harm him? Show me who is not.

¹ de Ira iii. §6.

² de Benef. vii. 1.

³ de Tranq. Anim. 7. Comp. Ep. Mor. xi.

⁴ Ep. Mor. vii 'Recede in te ipsum quantum potes,' de Otio 28 (1) 'Proderit tamen per se ipsum secedere; meliores erimus singuli': comp. ad Marc. 23.

⁵ Ep. Mor. xxv.

⁶ Ep. Mor. xcvi 'Cum esuriente panem suum dividat': comp. Is. lviii. 7 (Vulg.) 'Frange esurienti panem tuum,' Ezek. xviii. 7, 16.

⁷ Ep. Mor. xlvi.

⁸ Ep. Mor. ix.

⁹ de Vit. beat. 20: comp. de Otio 30 (3).

One is a slave to lust, another to avarice, a third to ambition, all alike to fear¹.'

But the moral teaching of Seneca will be brought out more clearly, while at the same time the conditions of the problem before us will be better understood, by collecting the parallels, which are scattered up and down his writings, to the sentiments and images in the Sermon on the Mount.

Parallels
to the Sermon on the Mount.

'The mind, unless it is pure and holy, comprehends not God².' Matt. v. 8.

'A man is a robber even before he stains his hands; for he is already armed to slay, and has the desire to spoil and to kill³.'

'The deed will not be upright unless the will be upright⁴.'

'Cast out whatsoever things rend thy heart: nay, if they could not be extracted otherwise, thou shouldst have plucked out thy heart itself with them⁵.'

'What will the wise man do when he is buffeted (colaphis percussus)? He will do as Cato did when he was smitten on the mouth. He did not burst into a passion, did not avenge himself, did not even forgive it, but denied its having been done⁶.'

'I will be agreeable to friends, gentle and yielding to enemies⁷.' v. 44.
'Give aid even to enemies⁸.'

'Let us follow the gods as leaders, so far as human weakness allows: let us give our good services and not lend them on usury... How many are unworthy of the light: and yet the day arises... This is characteristic of a great and good mind, to pursue not the fruits of a kind deed but the deeds themselves⁹.' 'We propose to ourselves...to follow the example of the gods...See what great ¹ Ep. Mor. xlvii. 1, 15, 17.

² Ep. Mor. lxxxvii. 21.

³ de Benef. v. 14. So also de Const. Sap. 7 he teaches that the sin consists in the intent, not the act, and instances adultery, theft, and murder.

⁴ Ep. Mor. lvii 'Actio recta non erit, nisi recta fuerit voluntas,' de Benef. v. 19 'Mens spectanda est dantis.'

⁵ Ep. Mor. li. 13.

⁶ de Const. Sap. 14.

⁷ de Vit. beat. 20 'Ero amicis jucundus, inimicis mitis et facilis.'

⁸ de Otio 28 (1) 'Non desinemus communi bono operam dare, adjuvare singulos, opem ferre etiam inimicis miti things they bring to pass daily, what great gifts they bestow, with what abundant fruits they fill the earth...with what suddenly falling showers they soften the ground...All these things they do without reward, without any advantage accruing to themselves...Let us be [Luke vi. 35.] ashamed to hold out any benefit for sale: we find the gods giving gratuitously. If you imitate the gods, confer benefits even on the unthankful: for the sun rises even on the wicked, and the seas are open to pirates¹.

(v.l. senili) manu': comp. also de Benef. v. 1 (fin.), vii. 31, de Ira i. 14. Such however is not always Seneca's tone with regard to enemies: comp. Ep. Mor. lxxxi 'Hoc certe, inquis, justitiæ convenit, suum cuique reddere, beneficio gratiam, injuriæ talionem aut certe malam gratiam. Verum erit istud, cum alius injuriam fecerit, alius beneficium dederit etc.' This passage shows that Seneca's doctrine was a very feeble and imperfect recognition of the Christian maxim 'Love your enemies.'

⁹ de Benef. i. 1. See the whole context.

vi. 3 sq. 'One ought so to give that another may receive. It is not giving or receiving to transfer to the right hand from the left².' 'This is the law of a good deed between two: the one ought at once to forget that it was conferred, the other never to forget that it was received³.'

vi. 10. 'Let whatsoever has been pleasing to God, be pleasing to man⁴.'

vi. 16. 'Do not, like those whose desire is not to make progress but to be seen, do anything to attract notice in your demeanour or mode of life. Avoid a rough exterior and unshorn hair and a carelessly kept beard and professed hatred of money and a bed laid on the ground and whatever else affects ambitious display by a perverse path...Let everything within us be unlike, but let our outward appearance (frons) resemble the common people⁵.'

vi. 19. 'Apply thyself rather to the true riches. It is shameful to depend for a happy life on silver and gold⁶.' 'Let thy good deeds be invested like a treasure deep-buried in the ground, which thou canst not bring to light, except it be necessary⁷.'

vii. 3 sq. 'Do ye mark the pimples of others, being covered with countless ulcers? This is as if a man should mock at the moles or warts on the most beautiful persons, when he himself is devoured by a fierce scab⁸.'

¹ de Benef. iv. 25, 26. See the context. Compare also de Benef. vii. 31.

² de Benef. v. 8.

³ de Benef. ii. 10.

⁴ Ep. Mor. lxxiv. 20.

⁵ Ep. Mor. v. 1, 2. Other writers are equally severe on the insincere professors of Stoic principles. 'Like their Jewish counterpart, the Pharisees, they were formal, austere, pretentious, and not unfrequently hypocritical'; Grant p. 281. Of the villain P. Egnatius Tacitus writes (Ann. xvi. 32), 'Auctori-

tatem Stoicæ sectæ præferebat habitu et ore ad exprimendam imaginem honesti exercitus.' Egnatius, like so many other Stoics, was an Oriental, a native of Beyrout (Juv. iii. 116). If the philosopher's busts may be trusted, the language of Tacitus would well describe Seneca's own appearance; but probably with him this austerity was not affected.

⁶ Ep. Mor. cx. 18.

⁷ de Vit. beat. 24.

⁸ de Vit. beat. 27.

‘Expect from others what you have done to another¹.’ ‘Let us vii. 12.
so give as we would wish to receive².’

‘Therefore good things cannot spring of evil...good does not vii. 16, 17.
grow of evil, any more than a fig of an olive tree. The fruits correspond to the seed³.’

‘Not otherwise than some rock standing alone in a shallow vii. 26.
sea, which the waves cease not from whichever side they are driven to beat upon, and yet do not either stir it from its place, etc....Seek some soft and yielding material in which to fix your darts⁴.’

Nor are these coincidences of thought and imagery confined to the Sermon on the Mount. If our Lord compares the hypocritical Pharisees to whited walls, and contrasts the scrupulously clean outside of the cup and platter with the inward corruption, Seneca also adopts the same images: ‘Within is no good: if thou shouldst see them, not where they are exposed to view but where they are concealed, they are miserable, filthy, vile, adorned without like their own walls...Then it appears how much real foulness beneath the surface this borrowed glitter has concealed⁵.’ If our Lord declares that the branches must perish unless they abide in the vine, the language of Seneca presents an eminently instructive parallel: ‘As the leaves cannot flourish by themselves, but want a branch wherein they may grow and whence they may draw sap, so those precepts wither if they are alone: they need to be grafted in a sect⁶.’ Again the parables of the sower, of the mustard-seed, of the debtor forgiven, of the talents placed out at usury, of the rich fool, have all their echoes in the writings of the Roman Stoic: ‘Words must be sown like seed which, though it be small, yet when it has found a suitable place unfolds its strength and from being the least spreads into the largest growth...They are few things which are spoken: yet if the mind has received them well, they gain strength and grow. The same, I say, is the case with precepts as with seeds. They produce much and yet they are scanty⁷.’ ‘Divine seeds are sown in human bodies. If a good Othercoin-cidences with our Lord's language.

¹ Ep. Mor. xciv. 43. This is a quotation.

² de Benef. ii. 1.

³ Ep. Mor. lxxxvii. 24, 25.

⁴ de Vit. beat. 27.

⁵ de Provid. 6.

⁶ Ep. Mor. xcv. 59. See the remarks below, p. 324, on this parallel.

⁷ Ep. Mor. xxxviii. 2.

husbandman receives them, they spring up like their origin...; if a bad one, they are killed as by barren and marshy ground, and then weeds are produced in place of grain¹. 'We have received our good things as a loan. The use and advantage are ours, and the duration thereof the divine disposer of his own bounty regulates. We ought to have in readiness what He has given us for an uncertain period, and to restore it, when summoned to do so, without complaint. He is the worst debtor, who reproaches his creditor². 'As the money-lender does not summon some creditors whom he knows to be bankrupt...So I will openly and persistently pass over some ungrateful persons nor demand any benefit from them in turn³. 'O how great is the madness of those who embark on distant hopes: I will buy, I will build, I will lend out, I will demand payment, I will bear honours: then at length I will resign my old age wearied and sated to rest. Believe me, all things are uncertain even to the prosperous. No man ought to promise himself anything out of the future. Even what we hold slips through our hands, and fortune assails the very hour on which we are pressing⁴. 'If our Master declares that 'it is more blessed to give than to receive,' the Stoic philosopher tells his readers that he 'would rather not receive benefits, than not confer them⁵,' and that 'it is more wretched to the good man to do an injury than to receive one⁶. 'If our Lord reminds His hearers of the Scriptural warning 'I will have mercy and not sacrifice,' if He commends the poor widow's mite thrown into the treasury as a richer gift than the most lavish offerings of the wealthy, if His whole life is a comment on the prophet's declaration to the Jews that God 'cannot away with their sabbaths and new moons,' so also Seneca writes: 'Not even in victims, though they be fat and their brows glitter with gold, is honour paid to the gods, but in the pious and upright intent of the worshippers⁷. The gods are 'worshipped not by the wholesale slaughter of fat carcasses of bulls nor by votive offerings of gold or silver, nor by money poured into their treasuries, but by the pious and upright intent⁸. 'Let us

¹ Ep. Mor. lxxiii. 16.

² Ad Marc. 10.

³ de Benef. v. 21.

⁴ Ep. Mor. ci. 4.

⁵ de Benef. i. 1.

⁶ Ep. Mor. xcv. 52: comp. de Benef. iv. 12, vii. 31, 32.

⁷ de Benef. i. 6.

⁸ Ep. Mor. cxv. 5.

forbid any one to light lamps on sabbath-days, since the gods do not want light, and even men take no pleasure in smoke...he worships God, who knows Him¹.' And lastly, if the dying prayer of the Redeemer is 'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do,' some have discovered a striking counterpart (I can only see a mean caricature) of this expression of triumphant self-sacrifice in the language of Seneca: 'There is no reason why thou shouldest be angry: pardon them; they are all mad².'

Nor are the coincidences confined to the Gospel narratives. The writings of Seneca present several points of resemblance also to the Apostolic Epistles. The declaration of St John that 'perfect love casteth out fear³' has its echo in the philosopher's words, 'Love cannot be mingled with fear⁴.' The metaphor of St Peter, also, 'Girding up the loins of your mind be watchful and hope⁵,' reappears in the same connexion in Seneca, 'Let the mind stand ready-girt, and let it never fear what is necessary but ever expect what is uncertain⁶.' And again, if St James rebukes the presumption of those who say, 'To-day or to-morrow we will go into such a city, when they ought to say, If the Lord will, we shall live and do this or that⁷,' Seneca in a similar spirit says that the wise man will 'never promise himself anything on the security of fortune, but will say, I will sail unless anything happen, and, I will become prætor unless anything happen, and, My business will turn out well for me unless anything happen⁸.'

The coincidences with St Paul are even more numerous and not less striking. It is not only that Seneca, like the Apostle of the Gentiles, compares life to a warfare⁹, or describes the struggle after good as a 'contest with the flesh¹⁰,' or speaks of this present

¹ Ep. Mor. xc. 47.

² de Benef. v. 17. See the remarks below, p. 295.

³ 1 Joh. iv. 18.

⁴ Ep. Mor. xlvii. 18.

⁵ 1 Pet. i. 13.

⁶ ad Polyb. II 'In procinctu stet animus etc.'

⁷ James iv. 13.

⁸ de Tranq. Anim. 13.

⁹ Ep. Mor. xcvi 'Vivere, Lucili, militare est'; ib. li 'Nobis quoque militandum est et quidem genere militiæ quo numquam quies, numquam otium, datur'; ib. lxxv 'Hoc quod vivit stipendium putat'; ib. cxx. 12 'Ci em se esse universi et militem credens.' The comparison is at least as old as the Book of Job, vii 1.

¹⁰ ad Marc. 24 'Omne illi cum hac carne grave certamen est.' The flesh is not unfrequently used for the carnal desires and repulsions, e.g. Ep. Mor. lxxiv 'Non est summa felicitatis nostræ in carne ponenda.' This use of σὰρξ has been traced to Epicurus.

- existence as a pilgrimage in a strange land and of our mortal bodies as tabernacles of the soul¹. Though some of these metaphors are more Oriental than Greek or Roman, they are too common to suggest any immediate historical connexion. It is more to the purpose to note special coincidences of thought and diction. The hateful flattery, first of Claudius and then of Nero, to which the expressions are prostituted by Seneca, does not conceal the resemblance of the following passages to the language of St Paul where they occur in a truer and nobler application. Of the former emperor he writes to a friend at court, 'In him are all things and he is instead of all things to thee': to the latter he says, 'The gentleness of thy spirit will spread by degrees through the whole body of the empire, and all things will be formed after thy likeness: health passes from the head to all the members².' Nor are still closer parallels wanting. Thus, while St Paul professes that he will 'gladly spend and be spent' for his Corinthian converts, Seneca repeats the same striking expression, 'Good men toil, they spend and are spent³.' Tit. i. 15. While the Apostle declares that 'unto the pure all things are pure, but unto the defiled and unbelieving nothing is pure,' it is the Roman philosopher's dictum that 'the evil man turns all things to evil⁴.' While St Paul in a well-remembered passage compares and contrasts the training for the mortal and the immortal crown, a strikingly similar use is made of the same comparison in the following words of Seneca; 'What blows do athletes receive in their face, what blows all over their body. Yet they bear all the torture from thirst of glory. Let us also overcome all things, for our reward is not a crown or a palm branch or the trumpeter proclaiming silence for the announcement of our name, but virtue and strength of mind and peace acquired ever after⁵.'

The coincidence will be further illustrated by the following

¹ Ep. Mor. cxx 'Nec domum esse hoc corpus sed hospitium et quidem breve hospitium,' and again 'Magnus animus... nihil horum quæ circa sunt suum judicat, sed ut commodatis utitur peregrinus et properans.' So also Ep. Mor. cii. 24 'Quicquid circa te jacet rerum tamquam hospitalis loci sarcinas spectat.' In this last letter (§ 23) he speaks of advancing age as a 'ripening to another birth (in alium maturescimus partum),' and designates death by the term since consecrated in the language of the Christian Church, as the birthday of eternity: 'Dies iste, quem tamquam supremum reformidas, æterni natalis est' (§ 26).

² ad Polyb. 7.

³ de Clem. ii. 2.

⁴ de Provid. 5.

⁵ Ep. Mor. xcvi. 3.

⁶ Ep. Mor. lxxviii. 16.

passages of Seneca, to which the corresponding references in St Paul are given in the margin.

'They consecrate the holy and immortal and inviolable gods Rom. i. 23. in motionless matter of the vilest kind: they clothe them with the forms of men, and beasts, and fishes¹.'

'They are ever enamoured of their own ill deeds, which is the last ill of all: and then is their wretchedness complete, when shameful things not only delight them but are even approved by them².'

'The tyrant is angry with the homicide, and the sacrilegious man punishes thefts³.' Rom. ii. 21, 22.

'Hope is the name for an uncertain good⁴.' Rom. viii. 24.

'Pertinacious goodness overcomes evil men⁵.' Rom. xii.

'I have a better and a surer light whereby I can discern the true from the false. The mind discovers the good of the mind⁶.' 1 Cor. ii. 11, 12.

'Let us use them, let us not boast of them: and let us use them sparingly, as a loan deposited with us which will soon depart⁷.' 1 Cor. vii. 31.

'To obey God is liberty⁸.' 2 Cor. iii. 17.

'Not only corrected but transfigured⁹.' 2 Cor. iii. 18.

'A man is not yet wise, unless his mind is transfigured into those things which he has learnt¹⁰.'

'What is man? A cracked vessel which will break at the least fall¹¹.'

'This is salutary; not to associate with those unlike ourselves and having different desires¹².' 2 Cor. vi. 14.

'That gift is far more welcome which is given with a ready than that which is given with a full hand¹³.' 2 Cor. ix. 7. (Prov. xxii. 9.)

'Gather up and preserve the time¹⁴.' Eph. v. 16.

'I confess that love of our own body is natural to us¹⁵.' Eph. v. 28, 29.

¹ de Superst. (Fragm. 31) in August. Civ. Dei vi. 10.

² Ep. Mor. xxxix. 6.

³ de Ira ii. 28.

⁴ Ep. Mor. x. § 2.

⁵ de Benef. vii. 31.

⁶ de Vit. beat. 2.

⁷ Ep. Mor. lxxiv. 18.

⁸ de Vit. beat. 15. Compare the language of our Liturgy, 'Whose service is perfect freedom.' Elsewhere (Ep. Mor. viii) he quotes a saying of Epicurus, 'Thou must be the slave of philosophy, that true liberty may fall to thy lot.'

⁹ Ep. Mor. vi. 1.

¹⁰ Ep. Mor. xciv. 48.

¹¹ ad Marc. 11. So Ps. xxxi. 14 'I am become like a broken vessel.'

¹² Ep. Mor. xxxii. 2.

¹³ de Benef. i. 7.

¹⁴ Ep. Mor. i. 1. So also he speaks elsewhere (de Brev. Vit. 1) of 'investing' time (conlocaretur).

¹⁵ Ep. Mor. xiv. 1. The word used for love is 'caritas.'

Col. ii. 22. 'Which comes or passes away very quickly, destined to perish in the very using (in ipso usu sui perituum)¹.'

1 Tim. ii. 9. 'Neither jewels nor pearls turned thee aside².'

1 Tim. iv. 8. 'I reflect how many exercise their bodies, how few their minds³.'
'It is a foolish occupation to exercise the muscles of the arms.... Return quickly from the body to the mind: exercise this, night and day⁴.'

1 Tim. v. 6. 'Do these men fear death, into which while living they have buried themselves⁵? 'He is sick: nay, he is dead⁶.'

2 Tim. iii. 7. 'They live ill, who are always learning to live⁷.' 'How long wilt thou learn? begin to teach⁸.'

In the opening sentences of our Burial Service two passages of Scripture are combined: 'We brought nothing into this world and it is certain we can carry nothing out. The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away: blessed be the name of the Lord.' Both passages have parallels in Seneca: 'Non licet plus efferre quam intuleris⁹;' 'Abstulit (fortuna) sed dedit¹⁰.'

In the speech on the Areopagus again, which was addressed partly to a Stoic audience, we should naturally expect to find parallels. The following passages justify this expectation.

Acts xvii. 24 sq. 'The whole world is the temple of the immortal gods¹¹.' 'Temples are not to be built to God of stones piled on high: He must be consecrated in the heart of each man¹².'

xvii. 25. 'God wants not ministers. How so? He Himself ministereth to the human race. He is at hand everywhere and to all men¹³.'

xvii. 27. 'God is near thee: He is with thee: He is within¹⁴.'

xvii. 29. 'Thou shalt not form Him of silver and gold: a true likeness of God cannot be moulded of this material¹⁵.'

The first impression made by this series of parallels is striking. They seem to show a general coincidence in the fundamental principles of theology and the leading maxims in ethics: they exhibit moreover special resemblances in imagery and expression, which, it

¹ de Vit. beat. 7.

² ad Helv. matr. 16.

³ Ep. Mor. lxxx. 2.

⁴ Ep. Mor. xv. 2, 5.

⁵ Ep. Mor. exxii. 3.

⁶ de Brev. Vit. 12.

⁷ Ep. Mor. xxiii. 9.

⁸ Ep. Mor. xxxiii. 9.

⁹ Ep. Mor. cii. 25.

¹⁰ Ep. Mor. lxiii. 7.

¹¹ de Beng. vii. 7.

¹² Fragm. 123, in Lactant. Div. Inst.

vi. 25.

¹³ Ep. Mor. xev. 47.

¹⁴ Ep. Mor. xli. 1.

¹⁵ Ep. Mor. xxxi. 11.

would seem, cannot be explained as the result of accident, but must point to some historical connexion. needs to be modified.

Nevertheless a nearer examination very materially diminishes the force of this impression. In many cases, where the parallels are most close, the theory of a direct historical connexion is impossible; in many others it can be shown to be quite unnecessary; while in not a few instances the resemblance, however striking, must be condemned as illusory and fallacious. After deductions made on all these heads, we shall still have to consider whether the remaining coincidences are such as to require or to suggest this mode of solution.

1. In investigating the reasonableness of explaining coincidences between two different authors by direct obligation on the one hand or the other, the dates of the several writings are obviously a most important element in the decision. In the present instance the relative chronology is involved in considerable difficulty. Difficulty of establishing the relative chronology.

It is roughly true that the literary activity of Seneca comprises about the same period over which (with such exceptions as the Gospel and Epistles of St John) the writings of the Apostles and Evangelists extend. But in some cases of parallelism it is difficult, and in others wholly impossible, to say which writing can claim priority of time. If the Epistles of St Paul may for the most part be dated within narrow limits, this is not the case with the Gospels: and on the other hand the chronology of Seneca's writings is with some few exceptions vague and uncertain. The priority sometimes belongs to Seneca.

In many cases however it seems impossible that the Stoic philosopher can have derived his thoughts or his language from the New Testament. Though the most numerous and most striking parallels are found in his latest writings, yet some coincidences occur in works which must be assigned to his earlier years, and these were composed certainly before the first Gospels could have been circulated in Rome, and perhaps before they were even written. Again several strong resemblances occur in Seneca to those books of the New Testament which were written after his death. Thus the passage which dwells on the fatherly chastisement of God¹ presents a coincidence, as remarkable as any, to the language of the Epistle to the Hebrews. Thus again in tracing the portrait of the perfect man (which has been thought to reflect many features of the life of Christ, delineated in the Gospels) he describes him as 'shining like a light in the darkness'; an expression which at once recalls the language applied to the Divine Word in the prologue of St John's Gospel. And again in the series of parallels given above many resemblances will have been noticed to the Pastoral Epistles, which can hardly have been written before Seneca's death. These facts, if they do not prove much, are at least so far valid as to show that the simple theory of direct borrowing from the Apostolic writings will not meet all the facts of the case.

¹ See above, p. 277 sq. Compare Hebrews xii. 5 sq., and see Prov. iii. 11, 12, which is quoted there.

Seneca's obligations to previous writers.

2. Again; it is not sufficient to examine Seneca's writings by themselves, but we must enquire how far he was anticipated by the older philosophers in those brilliant flashes of theological truth or of ethical sentiment, which from time to time dazzle us in his writings. If after all they should prove to be only lights reflected from the noblest thoughts and sayings of former days, or at best old fires rekindled and fanned into a brighter flame, we have found a solution more simple and natural, than if we were to ascribe them to direct intercourse with Christian teachers or immediate acquaintance with Christian writings. We shall not cease in this case to regard them as true promptings of the Word of God which was from the beginning, bright rays of the Divine Light which 'was in the world' though 'the world knew it not,' which 'shineth in the darkness' though 'the darkness comprehended it not': but we shall no longer confound them with the direct effulgence of the same Word made flesh, the Shechinah at length tabernacled among men, 'whose glory we beheld, the glory as of the only-begotten of the Father.'

And this is manifestly the solution of many coincidences which have been adduced above. Though Seneca was essentially a Stoic, yet he read widely and borrowed freely from all existing schools of philosophy². To the Pythagoreans and the Platonists he is largely indebted; and even of Epicurus, the founder of the rival school, he speaks with the deepest respect³. It will have been noticed that several of the most striking passages cited above are direct quo-

¹ Ep. Mor. cxx. 13 'Non aliter quam in tenebris lumen effulsit.'

² See what he says of himself, de Vit. beat. 3, de Otio 2 (29).

³ de Vit. beat. 13 'In ea quidem ipsa

sententia sum, in vitis hoc nostris popularibus dicam, sancta Epicurum et recta præcipere et, si propius accesseris, tristitia': comp. Ep. Mor. ii. 5, vi. 6, viii. 8, xx. 9.

tations from earlier writers, and therefore can have no immediate connexion with Christian ethics. The sentiment for instance, which approaches most nearly to the Christian maxim 'Love your enemies,' is avowedly based on the teaching of his Stoic predecessors¹.

And where this is not the case, recent research has shown that (with some exceptions) passages not only as profound in feeling and truthful in sentiment, but often very similar in expression and not less striking in their resemblance to the Apostolic writings, can be produced from the older philosophers and poets of Greece and Rome².

Parallels
as striking found in earlier authors.

One instance will suffice. Seneca's picture of the perfect man has been already mentioned as reflecting some features of the 'Son of Man' delineated in the Gospels. Yet the earlier portrait drawn by Plato in its minute touches reproduces the likeness with a fidelity so striking, that the chronological impossibility alone has rescued him from the charge of plagiarism: 'Though doing no wrong,' Socrates is represented saying, 'he will have the greatest reputation for wrong-doing,' 'he will go forward immovable even to death, appearing to be unjust throughout life but being just,' 'he will be scourged,' 'last of all after suffering every kind of evil he will be crucified (ἀνασχυδουλευθήσεται)³.' Not unnaturally Clement of Alexandria, quoting this passage, describes Plato as 'all but foretelling the dispensation of salvation⁴.'

3. Lastly: the proverbial suspicion which attaches to statistics ought to be extended to coincidences of language, for they may be, and often are, equally fallacious. An expression or a maxim, which detached from its context offers a striking resemblance to the theology or the ethics of the Gospel, is found to have a wholly different bearing when considered in its proper relations.

Many coincidences are fallacious.

This consideration is especially important in the case before us. Stoicism and Christianity are founded on widely different theological conceptions; and the ethical teaching of the two in many respects presents a direct contrast. St Jerome was led astray either by his ignorance of philosophy or by his partiality for a stern asceticism,

Stoicism
and Christianity are opposed.

¹ de Otio i (28). See above, p. 281, note 8. See also Schneider Christliche Klänge, p. 327 sq.

² Such parallels are produced from older writers by Aubertin (Sénèque et Saint Paul), who has worked out this line of argument. See also the large collection of passages in R. Schneider Christliche Klänge aus den Griechischen und Römischen Klassikern (Gotha, 1865).

³ Plato Resp. ii. pp. 361, 362. See Aubertin, p. 254 sq.

⁴ Strom. v. 14 μονονουχὶ προφητεύων τὴν σωτήριον οἰκονομίαν.

when he said that 'the Stoic dogmas in very many points coincide with our own¹.' It is in the doctrines of the Platonist and the Pythagorean that the truer resemblances to the teaching of the Bible are to be sought. It was not the Porch but the Academy that so many famous teachers, like Justin Martyr and Augustine, found to be the vestibule to the Church of Christ. Again and again the Platonic philosophy comes in contact with the Gospel; but Stoicism moves in another line, running parallel indeed and impressive by its parallelism, but for this very reason precluded from any approximation. Only when he deserts the Stoic platform, does Seneca really approach the level of Christianity. Struck by their beauty, he adopts and embodies the maxims of other schools: but they betray their foreign origin, and refuse to be incorporated into his system.

Seneca was a true
Stoic.

For on the whole Lactantius was right, when he called Seneca a most determined follower of the Stoics². It can only excite our marvel that any one, after reading a few pages of this writer, should entertain a suspicion of his having been in any sense a Christian. If the superficial colouring is not seldom deceptive, we cannot penetrate skindeep without encountering some rigid and inflexible dogma of the Stoic school. In his fundamental principles he is a disciple of Zeno; and, being a disciple of Zeno, he could not possibly be a disciple of Christ.

His pan-theistic materialism.

Interpreted by this fact, those passages which at first sight strike us by their resemblance to the language of the Apostles and Evangelists assume a wholly different meaning. The basis of Stoic theology is gross materialism, though it is more or less relieved and compensated in different writers of the school by a vague mysticism. The supreme God of the Stoic had no existence distinct from external nature. Seneca himself identifies Him with fate, with necessity, with nature, with the world as a living whole³. The different elements of the universe, such as the planetary bodies, were inferior

¹ Hieron. Comm. in Isai. iv. c. 11 'Stoici qui nostro dogmati in plerisque concordant' (Op. iv. p. 159, Vallarsi).

² See above, p. 268.

³ See especially de Benef. iv. 7, 8 'Natura, inquit, hoc mihi præstat. Non intellegis te, cum hoc dicis, mutare nomen deo? quid enim aliud est natura quam deus et divina ratio toti mundo

partibusque ejus inserta?...Hunc eundem et fatum si dixeris, non mentieris... Sic nunc naturam voca, fatum, fortunam, omnia ejusdem dei nomina sunt varie utentis sua potestate'; de Vit. beat. 8 'Mundus cuncta complectens rectorque universi deus.' Occasionally a more personal conception of deity appears: e. g. ad Helv. Matr. 8.

gods, members of the Universal Being¹. With a bold consistency the Stoic assigned a corporeal existence even to moral abstractions. Here also Seneca manifests his adherence to the tenets of his school. Courage, prudence, reverence, cheerfulness, wisdom, he says, are all bodily substances, for otherwise they could not affect bodies, as they manifestly do².

Viewed by the light of this material pantheism, the injunction to be 'followers of God' cannot mean the same to him as it does even to the Platonic philosopher, still less to the Christian Apostle. In Stoic phraseology 'imitation of God' signifies nothing deeper than a due recognition of physical laws on the part of man, and a conformity thereto in his own actions. It is merely a synonyme for the favourite Stoic formula of 'accordance with nature.' This may be a useful precept; but so interpreted the expression is emptied of its religious significance. In fact to follow the world and to follow God are equivalent phrases with Seneca³. Again in like manner, the lesson drawn from the rain and the sunshine freely bestowed upon all⁴, though in form it coincides so nearly with the language of the Gospel, loses its theological meaning and becomes merely an appeal to a physical fact, when interpreted by Stoic doctrine.

Hence also language, which must strike the ear of a Christian as shocking blasphemy, was consistent and natural on the lips of a Stoic. Seneca quotes with approbation the saying of his revered Sextius, that Jupiter is not better than a good man; he is richer, but riches do not constitute superior goodness; he is longer-lived, but greater longevity does not ensure greater happiness⁵. 'The good man,' he says elsewhere, 'differs from God only in length of time⁶.' 'He is like God, excepting his mortality⁷.' In the same spirit an earlier Stoic, Chrysippus, had boldly argued that the wise man is as useful to Zeus, as Zeus is to the wise man⁸. Such language is the legitimate consequence of Stoic pantheism.

¹ de Clem. i. 8.

² Ep. Mor. cvi: comp. Ep. Mor. cxvii.

³ de Ira ii. 16 'Quid est autem cur hominem ad tam infelicia exempla revoces, cum habeas mundum deumque, quem ex omnibus animalibus ut solus imitetur, solus intellegit.'

⁴ See the passages quoted above, p. 281 sq.

⁵ Ep. Mor. lxxiii. 12, 13.

⁶ de Prov. i.

⁷ de Const. Sap. 8: comp. Ep. Mor. xxxi 'Par deo surges.' Nay, in one respect good men excel God, 'Ille extra patientiam malorum est, vos supra patientiam,' de Prov. 6.

⁸ Plut. adv. Stoic. 33 (Op. Mor. p. 1078).

His language must be interpreted by his tenets.

Consistent blasphemies in speaking of God.

He has no conscious-ness of sin. Hence also the Stoic, so long as he was true to the tenets of his school, could have no real consciousness of sin. Only where there is a distinct belief in a personal God, can this consciousness find a resting-place. Seneca and Tertullian might use the same word peccatum, but its value and significance to the two writers cannot be compared. The Christian Apostle and the Stoic philosopher alike can say, and do say, that 'All men have erred'; but the moral key in which the saying is pitched is wholly different. With Seneca error or sin is nothing more than the failure in attaining to the ideal of the perfect man which he sets before him, the running counter to the law of the universe in which he finds himself placed. He does not view it as an offence done to the will of an all-holy all-righteous Being, an unfilial act of defiance towards a loving and gracious Father. The Stoic conception of error or sin is not referred at all to the idea of God². His pantheism had so obscured the personality of the Divine Being, that such reference was, if not impossible, at least unnatural.

Meaning of the holy spirit in Seneca.

And the influence of this pantheism necessarily pervades the Stoic vocabulary. The 'Sacer spiritus' of Seneca may be translated literally by the Holy Spirit, the πνεῦμα ἅγιον, of Scriptural language; but it signifies something quite different. His declaration that we are 'members of God,' is in words almost identical with certain expressions of the Apostle; but its meaning has nothing in common. Both the one and the other are modes of stating the Stoic dogma, that the Universe is one great animal pervaded by one soul or principle of life, and that into men, as fractions of this whole, as limbs of this body, is transfused a portion of the universal spirit³. It is almost purely a physical conception, and has no strictly theological value.

His moral teaching has all the repulsive features of Stoicism.

Again, though the sterner colours of Stoic morality are frequently toned down in Seneca, still the foundation of his ethical system betrays the repulsive features of his school. His fundamental maxim is not to guide and train nature, but to overcome it⁴. The passions and affections are not to be directed, but to be crushed. The wise man, he says, will be clement and gentle, but he will not feel pity, for only old women and girls will be moved by

¹ See the passages quoted above, p. 279.

² See the remarks of Baur, l.c. p. 190 sq., on this subject.

³ Compare the well-known passage in Virgil, Æn. vi. 726 'Spiritus intus alit totamque infusa per artus mens agitat molem et magno se corpore miscet.'

⁴ de Brev. Vit. 14 'Homini naturam cum Stoicis vincere.'

tears; he will not pardon, for pardon is the remission of a deserved penalty; he will be strictly and inexorably just¹.

It is obvious that this tone leaves no place for repentance, for forgiveness, for restitution, on which the theological ethics of the Gospel are built. The very passage², which has often been quoted as a parallel to the Saviour's dying words, 'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do,' really stands in direct contrast to the spirit of those words: for it is not dictated by tenderness and love, but expresses a contemptuous pity, if not a withering scorn.

In the same spirit Seneca commits himself to the impassive calm which forms the moral ideal of his school³. He has no sympathy with a righteous indignation, which Aristotle called 'the spur of virtue'; for it would disturb the serenity of the mind⁴. He could only have regarded with a lofty disdain (unless for the moment the man triumphed over the philosopher) the grand outburst of passionate sympathy which in the Apostle of the Gentiles has wrung a tribute of admiration even from unbelievers, 'Who is weak, and I am not weak? Who is offended, and I burn not⁵?' He would neither have appreciated nor respected the spirit which dictated those touching words, 'I say the truth...I lie not...I have great heaviness and continual sorrow of heart...for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh⁶.' He must have spurned the precept which bids the Christian 'rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep⁷,' as giving the direct lie to a sovereign maxim of Stoic philosophy. To the consistent disciple of Zeno the agony of Gethsemane could not have appeared, as to the Christian it ever will appear, the most sublime spectacle of moral sympathy, the proper consummation of a Divine life: for insensibility to the sorrows and sufferings of others was the only passport to perfection, as conceived in the Stoic ideal.

These considerations will have shown that many even of the most obvious parallels in Seneca's language are really no parallels at ¹ de Clem. ii. 5—7, where he makes a curious attempt to vindicate the Stoics.

² It is quoted above, p. 285.

³ Ep. Mor. lxxiv. 30 'Non adfigitur sapiens liberorum amissione, non amicorum: eodem enim animo fert illorum mortem quo suam expectat. Non magis hanc timet quam illam dolet...Inhonesta est omnis trepidatio et sollicitudo.' And see especially Ep. Mor. cxvi.

⁴ de Ira iii. 3.

⁵ 2 Cor. xi. 29.

⁶ Rom. ix. 1, 2, 3.

⁷ Rom. xii. 15.

Its impassiveness contrasts with the ethics of the Gospel.

Inconsistencies of Seneca and of Stoicism. all. They will have served moreover to reveal the wide gulf which separates him from Christianity. It must be added however, that his humanity frequently triumphs over his philosophy; that he often writes with a kindliness and a sympathy which, if little creditable to his consistency, is highly honourable to his heart. In this respect however he does not stand alone. Stoicism is in fact the most incongruous, the most self-contradictory, of all philosophic systems. With a gross and material pantheism it unites the most vivid expressions of the fatherly love and providence of God: with the sheerest fatalism it combines the most exaggerated statements of the independence and self-sufficiency of the human soul: with the hardest and most uncompromising isolation of the individual it proclaims the most expansive view of his relations to all around. The inconsistencies of Stoicism were a favourite taunt with the teachers of rival schools¹. The human heart in fact refused to be silenced by the dictation of a rigorous and artificial system, and was constantly bursting its philosophical fetters.

Coincidences still remain to be explained. But after all allowance made for the considerations just urged, some facts remain which still require explanation. It appears that the Christian parallels in Seneca's writings become more frequent as he advances in life². It is not less true that they are much more striking and more numerous than in the other great Stoics of the Roman period, Epictetus and M. Aurelius; for though in character these later writers approached much nearer to the Christian ideal than the minister of Nero, though their fundamental doctrines are as little inconsistent with Christian theology and ethics as his, yet the closer resemblances of sentiment and expression, which alone would suggest any direct obligations to Christianity, are, I believe, decidedly more frequent in Seneca³. Lastly: after all deductions made, a class of coincidences still remains, of which the expression

¹ See for instance the treatise of Plutarch de Repugnantiis Stoicorum (Op. Mor. p. 1033 sq.).

² Among his more Christian works are the de Providentia, de Otio, de Vita beata, de Beneficiis, and the Epistula Morales; among his less Christian, the de Constantia Sapientis and de Ira. In some cases the date is uncertain; but what I have said in the text will, I think, be found substantially true.

³ I have read Epictetus and M. Aurelius through with a view to such coincidences, and believe the statement in the text to be correct. Several of the more remarkable parallels in the former writer occur in the passages quoted below, p. 312 sq., and seem to warrant the belief that he was acquainted with the language of the Gospel.

'spend and be spent' may be taken as a type¹, and which can hardly be considered accidental. If any historical connexion (direct or indirect) can be traced with a fair degree of probability, we may reasonably look to this for the solution of such coincidences. I shall content myself here with stating the different ways in which such a connexion was possible or probable, without venturing to affirm what was actually the case, for the data are not sufficient to justify any definite theory.

Historical connexion.

1. The fact already mentioned is not unimportant, that the principal Stoic teachers all came from the East, and that therefore their language and thought must in a greater or less degree have borne the stamp of their Oriental origin. We advance a step further towards the object of our search, if we remember that the most famous of them were not only Oriental but Shemitic. Babylonia, Phœnicia, Syria, Palestine, are their homes. One comes from Scythopolis, a second from Apamea, a third from Ascalon, a fourth from Ptolemais, two others from Hierapolis, besides several from Tyre and Sidon or their colonies, such as Citium and Carthage². What religious systems they had the opportunity of studying, and how far they were indebted to any of these, it is impossible to say. But it would indeed be strange if, living on the confines and even within the borders of the home of Judaism, the Stoic teachers escaped all influence from the One religion which, it would seem, must have attracted the attention of the thoughtful and earnest mind, which even then was making rapid progress through the Roman Empire, and which afterwards through the Gospel has made itself far

(1) The Eastern origin of Stoicism.

Its possible obligations to Judaism.

¹ See above p. 286. Aubertin has attacked this very instance (p. 360 sq.), but without success. He only shows (what did not need showing) that 'impendere' is used elsewhere in this same sense. The important feature in the coincidence is the combination of the active and passive voices.

² I have noted down the following homes of more or less distinguished Stoic teachers from the East; Seleucia, Diogenes (p. 41); Epiphania, Euphrates (p. 613); Scythopolis, Basilides (p. 614); Ascalon, Antibiis, Eubius (p. 615); Hierapolis in Syria (?), Serapio (p. 612), Publius (p. 615); Tyre, Antipater, Apollonius (p. 520); Sidon, Zeno (p. 36), Boethus (p. 40); Ptolemais, Diogenes (p. 43); Apamea in Syria, Posidonius (p. 509); Citium, Zeno (p. 27), Persæus (p. 34); Carthage, Herillus (p. 33); Cyrene, Eratosthenes (p. 39). The Cilician Stoics are enumerated below p. 301. Of the other famous teachers belonging to the school, Cleanthes came from Assos (p. 31), Ariston from Chios (p. 32), Dionysius from Heraclea (p. 35), Sphærus from Bosphorus (p. 35), Panætius from Rhodes (p. 500), Epictetus from Hierapolis in Phrygia (p. 660). The references are to the pages of Zeller's work, where the authorities for the statements will be found.

more widely felt than any other throughout the civilized world. I have already ventured to ascribe the intense moral earnestness of the Stoics to their Eastern origin. It would be no extravagant assumption that they also owed some ethical maxims and some theological terms (though certainly not their main doctrines) directly or indirectly to the flourishing Jewish schools of their age, founded on the teaching of the Old Testament. The exaggerations of the early Christian fathers, who set down all the loftier sentiments of the Greek philosophers as plagiarisms from the lawgiver or the prophets, have cast suspicion on any such affiliation: but we should not allow ourselves to be blinded by reactionary prejudices to the possibilities or rather the probabilities in the case before us.

(2) Seneca's possible knowledge of Christianity.

2. The consideration which I have just advanced will explain many coincidences: but we may proceed a step further. Is it impossible, or rather is it improbable, that Seneca was acquainted with the teaching of the Gospel in some rudimentary form? His silence about Christianity proves nothing, because it proves too much. If an appreciable part of the lower population of Rome had become Christians some few years before Seneca's death¹, if the Gospel claimed converts within the very palace walls², if a few (probably not more than a few) even in the higher grades of society, like Pomponia Græcina³, had adopted the new faith, his acquaintance with its main facts is at least a very tenable supposition. If his own account may be trusted, he made a practice of dining with his slaves and engaging them in familiar conversation⁴; so that the avenues of information open to him were manifold⁵. His acquaintance with any written documents of Christianity is less probable; but of the oral Gospel, as repeated from the lips of slaves and others, he might at least have had an accidental and fragmentary knowledge. This supposition would explain the coincidences with the Sermon on the Mount and with the parables of our Lord, if they are clear and numerous enough to demand an explanation.

(3) His supposed con-

3. But the legend goes beyond this, and connects Seneca directly

¹ See above, p. 17 sq., 25.

² Phil. iv, 22; see p. 169 sq.

³ See above, p. 21.

⁴ Ep. Mor. xlvi.

⁵ An early inscription at Ostia (de Rossi Bull. de Archeol. Crist. 1867, p.

6, quoted Friedländer, iii, p. 535) mentions one M. Annæus Paulus Petrus, obviously a Christian. Was he descended from some freedman of Seneca's house?

with St Paul. The Stoic philosopher is supposed to be included among the 'members of Cæsar's household' mentioned in one of the Apostle's letters from Rome. The legend itself however has no value as independent evidence. The coincidences noted above would suggest it, and the forged correspondence would fix and substantiate it. We are therefore thrown back on the probabilities of the case; and it must be confessed that, when we examine the Apostle's history with a view to tracing a historical connexion, the result is not very encouraging. St Paul, it is true, when at Corinth, was brought before Seneca's brother Gallio, to whom the philosopher dedicates more than one work and of whom he speaks in tenderly affectionate language¹; but Gallio, who 'cared for none of these things,' to whom the questions at issue between St Paul and his accusers were merely idle and frivolous disputes about obscure national customs², would be little likely to bestow a serious thought upon a case apparently so unimportant, still less likely to communicate his experiences to his brother in Rome. Again it may be urged that as St Paul on his arrival in Rome was delivered to Burrus the prefect of the prætorian guards³, the intimate friend of Seneca, it might be expected that some communication between the Apostle and the philosopher would be established in this way. Yet, if we reflect that the prætorian prefect must yearly have been receiving hundreds of prisoners from the different provinces, that St Paul himself was only one of several committed to his guardianship at the same time, that the interview of this supreme magistrate with any individual prisoner must have been purely formal, that from his position and character Burrus was little likely to discriminate between St Paul's case and any other, and finally that he appears to have died not very long after the Apostle's arrival in Rome⁴, we shall see very little cause to lay stress on such a supposition. Lastly; it is said that, when St Paul was brought before Nero for trial, Seneca must have been present as the Emperor's adviser, and being present must have interested himself in the religious opinions of so remarkable a prisoner. But here again we have only

¹ Nat. Qu. iv. præf. § 10 'Gallionem fratrem meum quem nemo non parum amat, etiam qui amare plus non potest,' and again § 11 'Nemo mortalium unitam dulcis est, quam hic omnibus':

comp. Ep. Mor. civ. 'Domini mei Gallionis.'

² Acts xviii. 14, 45.

³ See above, p. 7 89.

⁴ See above, pp. 5, 8, 38.

a series of assumptions more or less probable. It is not known under what circumstances and in whose presence such a trial would take place; it is very far from certain that St Paul's case came on before Seneca had retired from the court; and it is questionable whether amid the formalities of the trial there would have been the opportunity, even if there were the will, to enter into questions of religious or philosophical interest. On the whole therefore it must be confessed that no great stress can be laid on the direct historical links which might connect Seneca with the Apostle of the Gentiles.

Summary
of results.

I have hitherto investigated the historical circumstances which might explain any coincidences of language or thought as arising out of obligations on the part of Seneca or of his Stoic predecessors. It has been seen that the teachers of this school generally were in all likelihood indebted to Oriental, if not to Jewish, sources for their religious vocabulary; that Seneca himself not improbably had a vague and partial acquaintance with Christianity, though he was certainly anything but a Christian himself; and that his personal intercourse with the Apostle of the Gentiles, though not substantiated, is at least not an impossibility. How far the coincidences may be ascribed to one or other of these causes, I shall not attempt to discriminate: but there is also another aspect of the question which must not be put out of sight. In some instances at least, if any obligation exist at all, it cannot be on the side of the philosopher, for the chronology resists this inference: and for these cases some other solution must be found.

Stoicism,
like Alexandrian Judaism, a preparation for the Gospel.

As the speculations of Alexandrian Judaism had elaborated a new and important theological vocabulary, so also to the language of Stoicism, which itself likewise had sprung from the union of the religious sentiment of the East with the philosophical thought of the West, was due an equally remarkable development of moral terms and images. To the Gospel which was announced to the world in 'the fulness of time,' both the one and the other paid their tribute. As St John (nor St John alone) adopted the terms of Alexandrian theology as the least inadequate to express the highest doctrines of Christianity, so St Paul (nor St Paul alone) found in the ethical language of the Stoics expressions more fit than he could find elsewhere to describe in certain aspects the duties and privileges, the struggles and the triumphs, of the Christian life. But though the words and symbols remained substantially the same, yet in their application they became instinct with new force and meaning. This change in either case they owed to their being placed in relation to the central fact of Christianity, the Incarnation of the Son. The Alexandrian terms, expressing the attributes and operations of the Divine Word, which in their origin had a purely metaphysical bearing, were translated into the sphere of practical theology, when God had descended among men to lift up men to God. The Stoic expressions, describing the independence of the individual spirit, the subjugation of the unruly passions, the universal empire of a triumphant self-control, the cosmopolitan relations of the wise man, were quickened into new life, when an unfailing source of strength and a boundless hope of victory had been revealed in the Gospel, when all men were proclaimed to be brothers, and each and every man united with God in Christ.

It is difficult to estimate, and perhaps not very easy to overrate, the extent to which Stoic philosophy had leavened the moral vocabulary of the civilised world at the time of the Christian era. To take a single instance; the most important of moral terms, the crowning triumph of ethical nomenclature, συνείδησις, conscientia, the internal, absolute, supreme judge of individual action, if not struck in the mint of the Stoics, at all events became current coin through their influence. To a great extent therefore the general diffusion of Stoic language would lead to its adoption by the first teachers of Christianity; while at the same time in St Paul's own case personal circumstances might have led to a closer acquaintance with the diction of this school.

Tarsus, the birth-place and constant home of St Paul, was at this time a most important, if not the foremost, seat of Greek learning. Of all the philosophical schools, the Stoic was the most numerously and ably represented at this great centre. Its geographical position, as a half-way house, had doubtless some influence in recommending it to a philosophy which had its birth-place in the East and grew into maturity in the West. At all events we may count up six or more ¹

Wide influence of the ethical language of Stoicism.

Stoicism at Tarsus.

¹ Strabo (xiv. 13, 14. p. 673 sq.) mentions five by name, Antipater, Archedemus, Nestor, Athenodorus surnamed Cordylion, and Athenodorus son of Sandon. To these may be added Zeno (Zeller, p. 40: Diog. Laert. vii,

St Paul's
acquaintance with Stoic
teaching.

well-known Stoic teachers whose home was at Tarsus, besides Chrysippus and Aratus who came from the neighbouring Soli¹, and three others who resided at Mallos, also a Cilician town². If St Paul's early education was Jewish, he was at least instructed by the most liberal teacher of the day, who, unlike his stricter countrymen and contemporaries, had no dread of Greek learning; and during his repeated and lengthened sojourns in Tarsus, he must have come in contact with Stoic maxims and dogmas. But indeed it is not mere conjecture, that St Paul had some acquaintance with the teachers or the writings of this school. The speech on the Areopagus, addressed partly to Stoics, shows a clear appreciation of the elements of truth contained in their philosophy, and a studied coincidence with their modes of expression³. Its one quotation moreover is taken from a Stoic writing, the hymn of Cleanthes, the noblest expression of heathen devotion which Greek literature has preserved to us⁴.

Two instances given.

And I think we may find occasionally also in St Paul's epistles sufficiently distinct traces of the influence of Stoic diction. A few instances are set down in the notes to this epistle. Many more might be gathered from his other letters, especially the Pastoral Epistles. But I will content myself with giving two broad examples, where the characteristic common-places of Stoic morality seem to be adopted and transfigured in the language of the Christian Apostle.

1. The portrait of the wise man.

1. The portrait of the wise man, the ideal of Stoic aspiration, has very distinct and peculiar features—so peculiar that they presented an easy butt for the ridicule of antagonists. It is his prominent characteristic that he is sufficient in himself, that he wants

35 enumerates eight of the name), and Heracleides (Zeller, p. 43). Of Athenodorus son of Sandon, Strabo adds ὁ καὶ Κανανίτην φασὶν ἀπὸ Κώμης τινός. If Strabo's explanation of Κανανίτης be correct, the coincidence with a surname of one of the Twelve Apostles is accidental. But one is tempted to suspect that the word had a Shemitic origin.

¹ The fathers of both these famous men appear to have migrated from Tarsus. For Chrysippus see Strabo xiv. 8, p. 671; of Aratus we are told that Asclepiades Ταρσέα φησὶν αὐτὸν γεγονέναι ἀλλ' οὐ Σολέα (Arati Opera II. p. 429 ed. Buhle).

² Crates (Zeller, p. 42), the two Procluses (ib. p. 615).

³ See above, p. 288.

⁴ Acts xvii. 28. The words in Cleanthes are ἐκ σοῦ γὰρ γένος ἐσμέν. The quotation of St Paul agrees exactly with a half-line in Aratus another Stoic poet, connected with his native Tarsus, τοῦ γὰρ καὶ γένος ἐσμέν. Since the Apostle introduces the words as quoted from some of their own poets, he would seem to have both passages in view. By οἱ καθ' ὑμᾶς ποιηταὶ he probably means the poets belonging to the same school as his Stoic audience.

nothing, that he possesses everything. This topic is expanded with a fervour and energy which often oversteps the proper bounds of Stoic calm. The wise man alone is free: he alone is happy: he alone is beautiful. He and he only possesses absolute wealth. He is the true king and the true priest¹.

Now may we not say that this image has suggested many expressions to the Apostle of the Gentiles? 'Even now are ye full,' he 1 Cor. iv. 8. exclaims in impassioned irony to the Corinthians, 'even now are ye rich, even now are ye made kings without us': 'we are fools for 1 Cor. iv. 10. Christ, but ye are wise in Christ: we are weak, but ye are strong: ye are glorious, but we are dishonoured.' 'All things are yours,' he 1 Cor. iii. says elsewhere, 'all things are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ 22, 23. is God's.' So too he describes himself and the other Apostles, 'As 2 Cor. vi. being grieved, yet always rejoicing; as beggars, yet making many rich; 10. as having nothing, and yet possessing all things.' 'In every thing 2 Cor. ix. at every time having every self-sufficiency (αὐτάρκειαν)...in every thing 8, 11. being enriched.' 'I have learnt,' he says again, 'in whatsoever circum- Phil. iv. 11, stances I am, to be self-sufficing. I have all strength in Him that 13, 18. giveth me power. I have all things to the full and to overflowing.'

If the coincidence of imagery in these passages is remarkable, Coinci- the contrast of sentiment is not less striking. This universal domi- dence and nion, this boundless inheritance, is promised alike by the Stoic contrast with Stoicism in St Paul's con- philosopher to the wise man and by the Christian Apostle to the ception. believer. But the one must attain it by self-isolation, the other by incorporation. The essential requisite in the former case is a proud independence; in the latter an entire reliance on, and intimate union with, an unseen power. It is ἐν τῷ ἐνδυναμοῦντι that the faithful becomes all-sufficient, all-powerful; it is ἐν Χριστῷ that he is crowned a king and consecrated a priest. All things are his, but they are only his, in so far as he is Christ's and because Christ is God's. Here and here only the Apostle found the realisation of the proud ideal which the chief philosophers of his native Tarsus had sketched in such bold outline and painted in these brilliant colours.

2. The instance just given relates to the development of the 2. The cos- individual man. The example which I shall next take expresses mopolitan teaching

¹ See esp. Seneca de Benef. vii. 3, 4, 3. 124 sq.) will be remembered. See 6, 10, Ep. Mor. ix. Compare Zeller, also the passages from Plutarch quoted p. 231. The ridicule of Horace (Sat. i. in Orelli's Excursus (ii. p. 67).

of the Stoics

his widest relations to others. The cosmopolitan tenets of the Stoics have been already mentioned. They grew out of the history of one age and were interpreted by the history of another. Negatively they were suggested by the hopeless state of politics under the successors of Alexander. Positively they were realised, or rather represented, by the condition of the world under the Roman Empire¹. In the age of the Seleucids and Ptolemies, when the old national barriers had been overthrown, and petty states with all their interests and ambitions had crumbled into the dust, the longing eye of the Greek philosopher wandered over the ruinous waste, until his range of view expanded to the ideal of a world-wide state, which for the first time became a possibility to his intellectual vision, when it became also a want to his social instincts. A few generations passed, and the wide extension of the Roman Empire, the far-reaching protectorate of the Roman franchise², seemed to give a definite meaning, a concrete form, in some sense a local habitation, to this idea which the Stoic philosopher of Greece had meanwhile transmitted to the Stoic moralist of Rome.

illustrated
by the language
of Seneca.

The language of Seneca well illustrates the nature of this cosmopolitan ideal. 'All this, which thou seest, in which are comprised things human and divine, is one. We are members of a vast body. Nature made us kin, when she produced us from the same things and to the same ends³.' 'I will look upon all lands as belonging to me, and my own lands as belonging to all. I will so live as if I knew that I am born for others, and on this account I will give thanks to nature...She gave me alone to all men and all men to me alone⁴.' 'I well know that the world is my country and the gods its rulers; that they stand above me and about me, the censors of my deeds and words⁵.' 'Seeing that we assigned to the wise man of the idea (so far as it was destined to be realised) was reserved for the Romans. 'Fecisti patriam diversis gentibus unam,' 'Urbem fecisti quod prius orbis erat,' says a later poet addressing the emperor of his day; Rutil. de Red. i. 63, 66.

¹ Plutarch (Op. Mor. p. 329 B) says that Alexander himself realised this ideal of a world-wide polity, which Zeno only delineated as a dream or a phantom (ὡς περ ὕπνα ἢ εἰδωλὸν ἀνατυπωσάμενος). If Plutarch's statement be correct that Alexander looked upon himself as entrusted with a divine mission to 'reconcile the whole world,' he certainly had the conception in his mind; but his actual work was only the beginning of the end, and the realisation

² See Cicero pro Balb. 13, Verr. v. 57, 65.

³ Ep. Mor. xcvi. 52.

⁴ de Vit. beat. 20.

⁵ ibid.

a commonwealth worthy of him, I mean the world, he is not beyond the borders of his commonwealth, even though he has gone into retirement. Nay, perhaps he has left one corner of it and passed into a larger and ampler region; and raised above the heavens he understands (at length) how lowly he was seated when he mounted the chair of state or the bench of justice¹. 'Let us embrace in our thoughts two commonwealths, the one vast and truly named common, in which are comprised gods and men, in which we look not to this corner or to that, but we measure the boundaries of our state with the sun; the other, to which the circumstances of our birth have assigned us². 'Virtue is barred to none: she is open to all, she receives all, she invites all, gentlefolk, freedmen, slaves, kings, exiles alike³. 'Nature bids me assist men; and whether they be bond or free, whether gentlefolk or freedmen, whether they enjoy liberty as a right or as a friendly gift, what matter? Wherever a man is, there is room for doing good⁴. 'This mind may belong as well to a Roman knight, as to a freedman, as to a slave: for what is a Roman knight or a freedman or a slave? Names which had their origin in ambition or injustice⁵.'

Did St Paul speak quite independently of this Stoic imagery, when the vision of a nobler polity rose before him, the revelation of a city not made with hands, eternal in the heavens? Is there not a strange coincidence in his language—a coincidence only the more striking because it clothes an idea in many respects very different? 'Our citizenship is in heaven.' 'God raised us with Him, and seated us with Him in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus.' 'Therefore ye are no more strangers and sojourners, but fellow-citizens with the saints and members of God's household.' 'Fulfil your duties as citizens worthily of the Gospel of Christ.' 'We being many are one body in Christ, and members one of another.' 'For as the body is one and hath many members, and all the members of the body being many are one body, so also is Christ: for we all are baptized in one Spirit into one body, whether Jews or Greeks, whether bond or free. Ye are the body of Christ

Its Christian counterpart in the heavenly citizenship of St Paul.
Phil.iii.20.
Ephes.ii.6.
Ephes.ii.
19.
Phil.i.27.
Rom.xii.
1 Cor.xii.
12, 13, 27.
Ephes.iv.
25, v. 30.]

¹ Ep. Mor. lxxiii.

² de Otio 4 (31). 'Glaubt man hier nicht,' asks Zeller (p. 275), 'fast Augustin De Civitate Dei zu hören?'

³ de Benef. iii. 18.

⁴ de Vit. beat. 24.

⁵ Ep. Mor. xxxi. 11.

Gal.iii.28. and members in particular.' 'There is neither Jew nor Greek; there is neither bond nor free; there is no male and female: for ye Col.iii.11. all are one in Christ Jesus.' 'Not Greek and Jew, circumcision and uncircumcision, barbarian, Scythian, bond, free: but Christ is all things and in all'.

Here again, though the images are the same, the idea is transfigured and glorified. At length the bond of coherence, the missing principle of universal brotherhood, has been found. As in the former case, so here the magic words ἐν Χριστῷ have produced the change and realised the conception. A living soul has been breathed into the marble statue by Christianity; and thus from the 'much admired polity of Zeno'² arises the Civitas Dei of St Augustine.

Summary. It has been the aim of the investigation just concluded to point out how far the coincidences between Seneca and St Paul are real, and how far fallacious; to show that these coincidences may in some cases be explained by the natural and independent development of religious thought, while in others a historical connexion seems to be required; and to indicate generally the different ways in which this historical connexion was probable or possible, without however attempting to decide by which of several channels the resemblance in each individual instance was derived.

Christianity and Stoicism compared. In conclusion it may be useful to pass from the special connexion between St Paul and Seneca to the more general relation between Christianity and Stoicism, and to compare them very briefly in their principles, their operations, and their results. Stoicism has died out, having produced during its short lifetime only very transient

¹ Ecce Homo p. 136 'The city of God, of which the Stoics doubtfully and feebly spoke, was now set up before the eyes of men. It was no unsubstantial city such as we fancy in the clouds, no invisible pattern such as Plato thought might be laid up in heaven, but a visible corporation whose members met together to eat bread and drink wine, and into which they were initiated by bodily immersion in water. Here the Gentile met the Jew whom he had been accustomed to regard as an enemy of the human race: the Roman met the lying Greek sophist, the Syrian slave, the gladiator born beside the Danube. In brotherhood they met, the natural birth and kindred of each forgotten, the baptism alone remembered in which they have been born again to God and to each other.' See the whole context.

² Plut. Op. Mor. p. 329 ἡ πολλὴ θαυμαζομένη πολιτεία τοῦ τὴν Στωϊκὴν αἵρεσιν καταβαλομένου Ζήνωνος. It is remarkable that this ideal is described in the context under a scriptural image, εἰς δὲ βίος ἡ καὶ κόσμος, ὥσπερ ἀγγέλῃ συννόμου νομῷ κοινῷ συντρεφομένης: comp. Joh. x. 16 καὶ γενήσεται μία πόλις, εἰς ποιμήν.

and partial effects; Christianity has become the dominant religion of the civilised world, and leavened society through its whole mass. The very coincidences, on which we have been dwelling so long, throw into relief the contrast between the failure of the one and the triumph of the other, and stimulate enquiry into the causes of this difference.

To some it may seem sufficient to reply that the one is a mere human philosophy, the other a Divine revelation. But this answer shelves without solving the problem; for it is equivalent to saying that the one is partial, defective, and fallacious, while the other is absolutely true. The question therefore, to which an answer is sought, may be stated thus: What are those theological and ethical principles, ignored or denied by Stoicism, and enforced by the Gospel, in which the Divine power of the latter lies, and to which it owes its empire over the hearts and actions of men? This is a very wide subject of discussion; and I shall only attempt to indicate a few more striking points of contrast. Yet even when treated thus imperfectly, such an investigation ought not to be useless. In an age when the distinctive characteristics of Christianity are regarded as a stumbling-block by a few, and more or less consciously ignored as of little moment by others, it is a matter of vast importance to enquire whether the secret of its strength does or does not lie in these; and the points at issue cannot be better suggested, than by comparing it with an abstract system of philosophy so imposing as the Stoic.

The question at issue stated.

Indeed our first wonder is, that from a system so rigorous and unflinching in its principles and so heroic in its proportions the direct results should have been marvellously little. It produced, or at least it attracted, a few isolated great men: but on the life of the masses, and on the policy of states, it was almost wholly powerless.

Meagre results of Stoicism.

Of the founder and his immediate successors not very much is known; but we are warranted in believing that they were men of earnest aspirations, of rare self-denial, and for the most part (though the grossness of their language seems hardly reconcilable with this view¹) of moral and upright lives. Zeno himself indeed cannot be

The older Stoics.

¹ It is impossible to speak with any confidence on this point. The language held by Zeno and Chrysippus was grossly licentious, and might be taken to show that they viewed with indifference and even complacency the most hateful forms of heathen impurity (see Plutarch Op. Mor. p. 1044, Clem. Hom. v. 18, Sext. Emp. Pyrrh. iii. 200 sq.). But it is due to the known character set down to the credit of the school. He made the philosophy and was not made by it. But Cleanthes was directly moulded by the influence of his master's teaching: and for calm perseverance, for rigorous self-discipline, and for unwavering devotion to a noble ideal, few characters in the history of Greek philosophy are comparable to him. Yet Cleanthes, like Zeno, died a suicide. The example, not less than the precept, of the first teachers of the sect created a fatal passion for self-murder, which was the most indelible, if not the darkest, blot on Stoic morality.

Stoicism
in Rome.

It was not however among the Greeks, to whose national temper the genius of Stoicism was alien, that this school achieved its proudest triumphs. The stern and practical spirit of the Romans offered a more congenial sphere for its influence. And here again it is worth observing, that their principal instructors were almost all Easterns. Posidonius for instance, the familiar friend of many famous

Its obligations to the East.

Romans and the most influential missionary of Stoic doctrine in Rome, was a native of the Syrian Apamea. From this time forward it became a common custom for the Roman noble to maintain in his house some eminent philosopher, as the instructor of his children and the religious director of himself and his family¹; and in this capacity we meet with several Oriental Stoics. Thus Cato the younger had at different times two professors of this sect domesticated in his household, both of Eastern origin, Antipater of Tyre and Athenodorus of Tarsus². In Cato himself, whom his contemporaries regarded as the 'most perfect Stoic³,' and in whom the sect at large would probably have recognised its most illustrious representative, we have a signal example alike of the virtues and of the younger.

Cato the

and teaching of these men, that we should put the most favourable construction on such expressions; and they may perhaps be regarded as theoretical extravagances of language, illustrating the Stoic doctrine that externals are indifferent (see Zeller, p. 261 sq.). Yet this mode of speaking must have been highly dangerous to morals; and the danger would only be increased by the fact that such language was held by men whose characters were justly admired in other respects.

¹ Seneca ad Marc. 4 'Consol[atori] se
Areo philosopho viri sui præbuit et multum eam rem profuisse sibi confessa est,' where he is speaking of Livia after the death of her son Drusus. This philosopher is represented as using the following words in his reply to her: 'Ego adsiduus viri tui comes, cui non tantum quæ in publicum emittuntur nota, sed omnes sunt secretiores animorum vestrorum motus.' For another allusion to these domestic chaplains of heathendom see de Tranq. Anim. 14 'Prosequatur illum philosophus suus.'

² Plutarch Vit. Cat. 4, 10, 16.

³ Cicero Brut. xxxi, Parad. procem. 2.

defects of the school. Honest, earnest, and courageous even to death, but hard, stolid, impracticable, and almost inhuman, he paralysed the higher qualities of his nature by his unamiable philosophy, so that they were rendered almost useless to his generation and country. A recent Roman historian has described him as 'one of the most melancholy phenomena in an age so abounding in political caricatures.' 'There was more nobility,' he writes bitterly, 'and above all more judgment in the death of Cato than there had been in his life.' 'It only elevates the tragic significance of his death that he was himself a fool¹.' Exaggerated as this language may be, it is yet not wholly without truth; and, were the direct social and political results of Cato's life alone to be regarded, his career must be pronounced a failure. But in fact his importance lies, not in what he did, but in what he was. It was a vast gain to humanity, that in an age of worldly self-seeking, of crooked and fraudulent policy, of scepticism and infidelity to all right principle, one man held his ground, stern, unbending, upright to the last. Such a man may fail, as Cato failed, in all the practical aims of life: but he has left a valuable legacy to after ages in the staunch assertion of principle; he has bequeathed to them a fructifying estate, not the less productive because its richest harvests must be reaped by generations yet unborn. Cato was the true type of Stoicism in its striking excellence, as in its hopeless weakness. The later Roman Stoics are feeble copies, more or less conscious, of Cato. Like him, they were hard, impracticable, perverse, studiously antagonistic to the prevailing spirit or the dominant power of their age: but, like him also, they were living protests, when protests were most needed, against the dishonesty and corruption of the times; and their fearless demeanour was felt as a standing reproach alike to the profligate despotism of the ruler and to the mean and cringing flattery of the subject. Yet it is mournful to reflect how much greater might have been the influence of men like Thræsea Pætus and Helvidius Priscus on their generation, if their strict integrity had been allied to a more sympathetic creed.

His excellences and defects.

Later Roman Stoics.

In these men however there was an earnest singleness of purpose, which may condone many faults. Unhappily the same cannot be said of Seneca. We may reject as calumnies the grosser charges Seneca.

¹ Mommsen's History of Rome, iv. pp. 156, 448 sq. (Eng. trans.).

with which the malignity of his enemies has laden his memory; but enough remains in the admission of his admirers, and more than enough in the testimony of his own writings, to forfeit his character as a high-minded and sincere man. No words are too strong to condemn the baseness of one who could overwhelm the emperor Claudius, while living, with the most fulsome and slavish flattery, and then, when his ashes were scarcely cold, turn upon him and poison his memory with the venom of malicious satire¹. From this charge there is no escape; for his extant writings convict him. We may well refuse to believe, as his enemies asserted, that he counselled the murder of Agrippina; but it seems that he was in some way implicated with the matricide, and it is quite certain that he connived at other iniquities of his imperial pupil. We may indignantly repudiate, as we are probably justified in doing, the grave charges of moral profligacy which were brought against him in his lifetime, and after his death; but the man who, while condemning, can describe at length the grossest forms of impurity (as Seneca does occasionally) had surely no very sensitive shrinking from sins 'of which it is a shame even to speak.' We may demur to accepting the account of his enemies, that his wealth was amassed by fraud and violence; but there is no doubt that, while preaching a lofty indifference to worldly advantages, he consented to be enriched by a profligate and unscrupulous tyrant, and that the enormous property thus accumulated exposed him to the reproaches of his contemporaries. A portrait which combines all these features will command no great respect. Yet, notwithstanding a somewhat obtrusive rhetoric, there is in Seneca's writings an earnestness of purpose, a yearning after moral perfection, and a constant reference to an ideal standard, which cannot be mere affectation. He seems to have been a rigorous ascetic in early life, and to the last to have maintained a severe self-discipline. Such at least is his own statement; nor is it unsupported by less partial testimony².

For all this inconsistency however we must blame not the creed but the man. He would probably have been much worse, if his

¹ The treatise ad Polybium de Consolatione would be disgraceful, if it stood alone; but contrasted with the Ludus de Morte Claudii it becomes odious. To complete his shame, he was the author of the extravagant panegyric pronounced by Nero over his predecessor (Tac. Ann. xiii. 3).

² See Ep. Mor. lxxxvii. 2, cviii. 14; comp. Tac. Ann. xiv. 53, xv. 45, 63.

philosophy had not held up to him a stern ideal for imitation. Is it genuine or affected humility—a palliative or an aggravation of his offence—that he himself confesses how far he falls short of this ideal? To those taunting enemies of philosophy, who pointing to his luxury and wealth ask ‘Why do you speak more bravely than you live?’, he replies: ‘I will add to your reproaches just now, and I will bring more charges against myself than you think. For the present I give you this answer: I am not wise, and (to feed your malevolence) I shall not be wise. Therefore require of me, not that I should equal the best men, but that I should be better than the bad. It is enough for me daily to diminish my vices in some degree and to chide my errors.’ ‘These things,’ he adds, ‘I say not in my own defence, for I am sunk deep in all vices, but in defence of him who has made some progress.’ ‘The wise man,’ he writes apologetically, ‘does not think himself unworthy of any advantages of fortune. He does not love riches but he prefers them. He receives them not into his soul but into his house. Nor does he spurn them when he has them in his possession, but retains them and desires ampler material for his virtue to be furnished thereby.’ ‘I am not now speaking to you of myself,’ he writes to Lucilius, ‘for I fall far short of a moderate, not to say a perfect man, but of one over whom fortune has lost her power.’ Seneca, more than any man, must have felt the truth of the saying, ‘How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God.’

From Seneca it is refreshing to turn to Epictetus. The lame Epictetus, slave of Epaphroditus is a far nobler type of Stoic discipline than the wealthy courtier of Epaphroditus’ master. Here at all events, we feel instinctively that we have to do with genuine earnestness. His motto ‘bear and forbear’¹ inspires his discourses throughout, as it appears also to have been the guide of his life. But more striking still is the spirit of piety which pervades his thoughts. ‘When ye have shut the doors,’ he says, ‘and have made all dark within, remem-

¹ de Vit. beat. 17; comp. ad Helv. Matr. 5.

² de Vit. beat. 21.

³ Ep. Mor. lvii. 3.

⁴ The account of Seneca in Martha’s Moralistes p. 1 sq. is well worth reading, though the idea of the spiritual direction in the letters to Lucilius seems exaggerated. I wish I could take as favourable a view of Seneca’s character as this writer does.

⁵ ἀνέχου καὶ ἀπέχου, Aul. Gell. xvii. 19, where the words are explained.

His own confessions of weakness.

Expos-
sions of piety in his writings.

ber never to say that ye are alone, for ye are not; but God is within and so is your angel (δαίμων); and what need of light have these to see what ye do? To this God ye also ought to swear allegiance, as soldiers do to Cæsar¹. 'If we had sense, ought we to do anything else both in public and in private but praise and honour the divine being (τὸ θεῖον) and recount his favours?.....What then? Since ye, the many, are blinded, should there not be some one to fill this station and to sing for all men the hymn to God? For what else can I, a lame old man, do but sing hymns to God? Nay, if I were a nightingale, I had done the work of a nightingale; if a swan, the work of a swan. So being what I am, a rational creature, I must sing hymns to God. This is my task, and I perform it; nor will I ever desert this post, so far as it is vouchsafed me: and you I exhort to join in this same song². 'How then dost thou appear? As a witness called by God: Come thou and bear witness to me... What witness dost thou bear to God? I am in wretched plight, O Lord, and I am miserable; no one cares for me, no one gives me anything; all men blame me, all men speak ill of me. Wilt thou bear this witness, and disgrace the calling wherewith He hath called thee, for that He honoured thee and held thee worthy to be brought forward as a witness in this great cause³? 'When thou goest to visit any great person, remember that Another also above seeth what is done, and that thou oughtest to please Him rather than this one⁴. 'Thou art an offshoot (ἀπόσπασμα) of God; thou hast some part of Him in thyself. Why therefore dost thou not perceive thy noble birth? Why dost thou not know whence thou art come? Thou bearest God about with thee, wretched man, and thou dost not perceive it. Thinkest thou that I mean some god of silver or gold, without thee? Within thyself thou bearest Him, and thou dost not feel that thou art defiling Him with thy impure thoughts and thy filthy deeds. If

¹ Diss. i. 14. 13 sq.; comp. Matt. xxii. 21.

² Diss. i. 16. 15 sq.

³ Diss. i. 29. 46 sq. The words τὴν κλήσιν ἣν κέκληκεν appear from the context to refer to citing witnesses, but they recall a familiar expression of St Paul; 1 Cor. vii. 20, Ephes. iv. 1, comp. 2 Tim. i. 9. The address Κύριε, used in prayer to God, is frequent in Epictetus, but does not occur (so far as I am aware) in any heathen writing before the Apostolic times. Sometimes we find Κύριε ὁ Θεός, and once he writes Κύριε ἐλέησον (ii. 7. 12). It is worth noting that all the three cities where Epictetus is known to have lived—Hierapolis, Rome, Nicopolis—occur in the history of St Paul.

⁴ Diss. i. 30. 1.

an image of God were present, thou wouldest not dare to do any of these things which thou doest: but, God Himself being present within thee, and overlooking and overhearing all, thou art not ashamed to think and to do these things, O man, insensible of thine own nature, and visited with the wrath of God¹. 'Remember that thou art a son. What profession is due to this character? To consider all that belongs to Him as belonging to a father, to obey Him in all things, never to complain of Him to any one, nor to say or do anything hurtful to Him, to yield and give way to Him in all things, working with Him to the utmost of thy power². 'Dare to look up to God and say, Use me henceforth whereunto thou wilt, I consent unto Thee, I am Thine. I shrink from nothing that seemeth good to Thee. Lead me where Thou wilt: clothe me with what garments Thou wilt. Wouldest Thou that I should be in office or out of office, should live at home or in exile, should be rich or poor? I will defend Thee for all these things before men³. 'These (vices) thou canst not cast out otherwise than by looking to God alone, by setting thine affections (προσπεπονθότα) on Him alone, by being consecrated to His commands⁴. 'When thou hast heard these words, O young man, go thy way and say to thyself, It is not Epictetus who has told me these things (for whence did he come by them?), but some kind God speaking through him. For it would never have entered into the heart of Epictetus to say these things, seeing it is not his wont to speak (so) to any man. Come then, let us obey God, lest God's wrath fall upon us (*ἵνα μὴ θεοχόλωτοι ᾖμεν*⁵). 'Thus much I can tell thee now, that he, who setteth his hand to so great a matter without God, calls down God's wrath and does but desire to behave himself unseemly in public. For neither in a well-ordered household does any one come forward and say to himself I must be steward. Else the master, observing him and seeing him giving his orders insolently, drags him off to be scourged. So it happens also in this great city (of the world), for here too there is a householder, who ordereth everything⁶. 'The cynic (i.e.

¹ Diss. ii. 8. 11 sq. We are reminded of the surname θεοφόρος, borne by a Christian contemporary of Epictetus and by many later Christian saints.

² Diss. ii. 10. 7.

³ Diss. ii. 16. 42.

⁴ Diss. ii. 16. 46.

⁵ Diss. iii. 1. 36 sq.

⁶ Diss. iii. 22. 2 sq. The passage bears a strong resemblance to our Lord's parable in Matt. xxiv. 45 sq., Luke xii. 41 sq. The expressions, ὁ

the true philosopher) ought to know that he is sent a messenger from God to men, to show them concerning good and evil'. 'He must be wholly given without distraction to the service of God, free to converse with mankind, not tied down by private duties, nor entangled in relations, which if he transgresses, he will no longer keep the character of a noble and good man, and if he observes, he will fail in his part as the messenger and watchman and herald of the gods'.

Improved
tone of Stoic theology.

The genuine piety of these passages is a remarkable contrast to the arrogance and blasphemy in which the older Stoics sometimes indulged and which even Seneca repeats with approval³. Stoic theology, as represented by Epictetus, is fast wiping away its reproach; but in so doing it has almost ceased to be Stoic. The pantheistic creed, which identifies God with the world, is kept in the background; and by this subordination greater room is left for the expansion of true reverence. On the other hand (to pass over graver defects in his system) he has not yet emancipated himself from the austerity and isolation of Stoical ethics. There still remains a hardness and want of sympathy about his moral teaching, which betrays its parentage. But enough has been said to account for the fact that the remains of Epictetus have found a place in the library of the Church, and that the most pious and thoughtful Christian divines have listened with admiration to his devout utterances⁴.

οἰκονόμος, ὁ κύριος, ὁ οἰκοδεσπότης, occur in both the philosopher and the Evangelists. Moreover the word ἐτεμεν in Epictetus corresponds to διχοτομήσει in the Gospels, and in both words the difficulty of interpretation is the same. I can hardly believe that so strange a coincidence is quite accidental. Combined with the numerous parallels in Seneca's writings collected above (p. 281 sq.), it favours the supposition that our Lord's discourses in some form or other were early known to heathen writers. For other coincidences more or less close see i. 9. 19, i. 25. 10, i. 29. 31, iii. 21. 16, iii. 22. 35, iv. 1. 79 (ἀν δ' ἀγγαρεῖα ᾗ κ.τ.λ., comp. Matt. v. 41), iv. 8. 36.

¹ Diss. iii. 22, 23.

² Diss. iii. 22. 69. I have only been able to give short extracts, but the whole passage should be read. Epictetus appears throughout to be treading in the footsteps of St Paul. His words, ἀπερίσπαστον εἶναι δεῖ ὅλον πρὸς τῇ διακονίᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ, correspond to the Apostle's expression, εὐπάρεδρον τῷ Κυρίῳ ἀπερισπάτως (1 Cor. vii. 35), and the reason given for remaining unmarried is the same. Another close coincidence with St Paul is ὁ μὲν θέλει οὐ ποιεῖ (ii. 26. 1). Again such phrases as νομίμως ἀθλεῖν (iii. 10. 8), γράμματα συστατικά (ii. 3. 1), ταῦτα μελέτα (iv. 1. 170), οὐκ εἰμι ἐλεύθερος; (iii. 22. 48), recall the Apostle's language. Other Scriptural expressions also occur, such as Θεοῦ ζηλωτής (ii. 14. 13), τροφὴ στερεωτέρα (ii. 16. 39), etc.

³ See above p. 293.

⁴ 'Epictetus seems as if he had come after or before his time; too late for

As Epictetus gives a higher tone to the theology of the school, M. Aurelius^{us.} so the writings of M. Aurelius manifest an improvement in its ethical teaching. The manifold opportunities of his position would cherish in an emperor naturally humane and sensitive wider sympathies, than were possible to a lame old man born and bred a slave, whom cruel treatment had estranged from his kind and who was still further isolated by his bodily infirmity. At all events it is in this point, and perhaps in this alone, that the meditations of M. Aurelius impress us more favourably than the discourses of Epictetus. As a conscious witness of God and a stern preacher of righteousness, the Phrygian slave holds a higher place: but as a kindly philanthropist, conscientiously alive to the claims of all men far and near, the Roman emperor commands deeper respect. In him, for the first and last time in the history of the school, the cosmopolitan sympathies, with which the Stoic invested his wise man, become more than a mere empty form of rhetoric. His natural disposition softened the harsher features of Stoical ethics. The brooding melancholy and the almost feminine tenderness, which appear in his meditations, are a marked contrast to the hard outlines in the portraiture of the older Stoics. Cato was the most perfect type of the school: but M. Aurelius was the better man, because he was the worse Stoic. Altogether there is a true beauty and nobleness of character in this emperor, which the accidents of his position throw into stronger relief. Beset by all the temptations which unlimited power could create, and sorely tried in the most intimate and sacred relations of life—with a profligate wife and an inhuman son—he neither sullied nor hardened his heart, but remained pure and upright and amiable to the end, the model of a conscientious if not a wise ruler, and the best type which heathendom could give of a high-minded gentleman. With all this it is a more than ‘tragical fact,’ that his justice and his humanity alike broke down in one essential point, and that by his tone of Stoic

Improved
morality.

Persecution of the Christians.

philosophy, too early for religion. We are tempted continually to apply to his system the hackneyed phrase: It is all very magnificent, but it is not philosophy—it is too one-sided and careless of knowledge for its own sake; and it is not religion—it is inadequate and wants a basis. Yet for all this, as long as men appreciate elevated thought, in direct and genuine language, about human duties and human improvement, Epictetus will have much to teach those who know more than he did both of philosophy and religion. It is no wonder that he kindled the enthusiasm of Pascal or fed the thought of Butler.’ Saturday Review, Vol. xxii. p. 580.

bigotry or through his connivance the Christians suffered more widely and cruelly during his reign than at any other epoch in the first century and a half of their existence¹. Moreover the inherent and vital defects of the school, after all the modifications it had undergone and despite the amiable character of its latest representative, are still patent. 'The Stoicism of M. Aurelius gives many of the moral precepts of the Gospel, but without their foundation, which can find no place in his system. It is impossible to read his reflections without emotion, but they have no creative energy. They are the last strain of a dying creed².'

References to Christianity in Epictetus and M. Aurelius.

It is interesting to note the language in which these two latest and noblest representatives of Stoicism refer to the Christians. Once and once only is the now numerous and rapidly growing sect mentioned by either philosopher, and in each case dismissed curtly with an expression of contempt. 'Is it possible,' asks Epictetus, 'that a man may be so disposed under these circumstances from madness, or from habit like the Galileans, and can no one learn by reason and demonstration that God has made all things which are in the world³?' 'This readiness to die,' writes M. Aurelius, 'should follow from individual judgment, not from sheer obstinacy as with the Christians, but after due consideration and with dignity and without scenic display (ἀρπαγῶδως), so as to convince others also⁴.' The justice of such contemptuous allusions may be tested by the simple and touching narratives of the deaths of this very emperor's victims, of Polycarp at Smyrna, and of the Gallic martyrs at Vienne and Lyons: and the appeal may confidently be made to the impartial judgment of mankind to decide whether there was more scenic display or more genuine obstinacy in their last moments, than in the much vaunted suicide of Cato and Cato's imitators.

¹ Martha, Moralistes p. 212, attempts to defend M. Aurelius against this charge; but the evidence of a wide persecution is irresistible. For the motives which might lead M. Aurelius, both as a ruler and as a philosopher, to sanction these cruelties, see Zeller Marcus Aurelius Antoninus in his Vorträge p. 101 sq. If it were established that this emperor had intimate relations with a Jewish rabbi, as has been recently maintained (M. Aurelius Antoninus als Freund u. Zeitgenosse des Rabbi Jehuda ha-Nasi by A. Bodek, Leipz. 1868; see Prof. Plumptre in the Contemporary Review Jan. 1869, p. 81 sq.), he would have an additional motive for his treatment of the Christians; but, to say the least, the identification of the emperor is very uncertain.

² Westcott in Smith's Dictionary of the Bible II. p. 857, s. v. Philosophy.

³ Diss. iv. 7. 6.

⁴ M. Anton. xi. 3.

I have spoken of Epictetus and M. Aurelius as Stoics, for so they regarded themselves; nor indeed could they be assigned to any other school of philosophy. But their teaching belongs to a type, which in many respects would hardly have been recognised by Zeno or Chrysippus. Stoicism during the Roman period had been first attaching to itself, and then assimilating, diverse foreign elements, Platonic, Pythagorean, even Jewish and Christian. In Seneca these appear, side by side, but distinct; in Epictetus and M. Aurelius they are more or less fused and blended. Roman Stoicism in fact presents to us not a picture with clear and definite outlines, but a dissolving view. It becomes more and more eclectic. The materialism of its earlier theology gradually recedes; and the mystical element appears in the foreground¹. At length Stoicism fades away; and a new eclectic system, in which mysticism has still greater predominance, emerges and takes its place. Stoicism has fought the battle of heathen philosophy against the Gospel, and been vanquished. Under the banner of Neoplatonism, and with weapons forged in the armoury of Christianity itself, the contest is renewed. But the day of heathendom is past. This new champion also retires from the conflict in confusion, and the Gospel remains in possession of the field.

Eclecticism of the later Stoics.
Stoicism succeeded by Neoplatonism.

In this attempt to sketch the progress and results of this school, I have not travelled beyond a few great names. Nor has any injustice been done to it by this course; for Stoicism has no other history, except the history of its leaders. It consisted of isolated individuals, but it never attracted the masses or formed a community. It was a staff of professors without classes. This sterility must have been due to some inherent vicious principles: and I propose now to consider its chief defects, drawing out the contrast with Christianity at the same time.

The masses unaffected by Stoicism.

Causes of this failure.

1. The fundamental and invincible error of Stoic philosophy was its theological creed. Though frequently disguised in devout language which the most sincere believer in a personal God might have welcomed as expressing his loftiest aspirations, its theology was nevertheless, as dogmatically expounded by its ablest teachers, nothing better than a pantheistic materialism. This inconsistency between the philosophic doctrine and the religious phraseology of

1. Its pantheism.

¹ On the approximation of the later Stoics, and more especially of M. Aure-lius, to Neoplatonism, see Zeller's Nach-aristotelische Philosophie II. p. 201 sq.

Hymn of Cleanthes.

Contradiction between Stoic dogma and Stoic hymnology.

the Stoics is a remarkable feature, which perhaps may be best explained by its mixed origin. The theological language would be derived in great measure from Eastern (I venture to think from Jewish) affinities, while the philosophical dogma was the product of Hellenized thought. Heathen devotion seldom or never soars higher than in the sublime hymn of Cleanthes. 'Thine offspring are we,' so he addresses the Supreme Being, 'therefore will I hymn Thy praises and sing Thy might for ever. Thee all this universe which rolls about the earth obeys, wheresoever Thou dost guide it, and gladly owns Thy sway.' 'No work on earth is wrought apart from Thee, nor through the vast heavenly sphere, nor in the sea, save only the deeds which bad men in their folly do.' 'Unhappy they, who ever craving the possession of good things, yet have no eyes or ears for the universal law of God, by wise obedience whereunto they might lead a noble life.' 'Do Thou, Father, banish fell ignorance from our soul, and grant us wisdom, whereon relying Thou rulest all things with justice, that being honoured, we with honour may requite Thee, as beseemeth mortal man: since neither men nor gods have any nobler task than duly to praise the universal law for aye¹.' If these words might be accepted in their first and obvious meaning, we could hardly wish for any more sublime and devout expression of the relations of the creature to his Creator and Father. But a reference to the doctrinal teaching of the school dispels the splendid illusion. Stoic dogma empties Stoic hymnology of half its sublimity and more than half its devoutness. This Father in heaven, we learn, is no personal Being, all righteous and all holy, of whose loving care the purest love of an earthly parent is but a shadowy counterfeit. He—or It—is only another name for nature, for necessity, for fate, for the universe. Just in proportion as the theological doctrine of the school is realised, does its liturgical language appear forced and unnatural. Terms derived from human relationships are confessedly very feeble and inadequate at best to express the person and attributes of God; but only a mind prepared by an artificial training could use such language as I have quoted with the meaning which it is intended to bear. To simple people it would be impossible to address fate or necessity or universal nature, as a Father, or to express towards it feelings of filial obedience and love.

¹ Fragm. Philos. Græc. i. p. 151 (ed. Mullach).

And with the belief in a Personal Being, as has been already remarked, the sense of sin also will stand or fall¹. Where this belief is absent, error or wrong-doing may be condemned from two points of view, irrespective of its consequences and on grounds of independent morality. It may be regarded as a defiance of the law of our being, or it may be deprecated as a violation of the principles of beauty and propriety implanted in the mind. In other words it may be condemned either from physical or from aesthetic considerations. The former aspect is especially common with the Stoics, for indeed conformity with nature is the groundwork of Stoical ethics. The latter appears occasionally, though this point of view is characteristic rather of the Academy than of the Porch. These are important subsidiary aids to ethical teaching, and should not be neglected: but the consciousness of sin, as sin, is distinct from both. It is only possible where there is a clear sense of a personal relation to a Personal Being, whom we are bound to love and obey, whose will must be the law of our lives and should be the joy of our hearts. Here again the Stoic's language is treacherous. He can talk of sin, just as he can talk of God his Father. But so long as he is true to his dogma, he uses terms here, as before, in a non-natural sense. Only so far as he deserts the theological standing-ground of his school (and there is much of this happy inconsistency in the great Stoic teachers), does he attain to such an apprehension of the 'exceeding sinfulness of sin' as enables him to probe the depths of the human conscience.

2. When we turn from the theology to the ethics of the Stoical school, we find defects not less vital in its teaching. Here again Stoicism presents in itself a startling and irreconcilable contradiction. The fundamental Stoic maxim of conformity to nature, though involving great difficulties in its practical application, might at all events have afforded a starting-point for a reasonable ethical code. Yet it is hardly too much to say that no system of morals, which the wit of man has ever devised, assumes an attitude so fiercely defiant of nature as this. It is mere folly to maintain that pain and privation are no evils. The paradox must defeat its own

No consciousness
of sin.

2. Defects in Stoical ethics.

Defiance of nature.

¹ See above, p. 294.

ends. True religion, like true philosophy, concedes the point, and sets itself to counteract, to reduce, to minimise them. Our Lord 'divides himself at once from the ascetic and the Stoic. They had said, Make yourselves independent of bodily comforts: he says, Ye have need of these things¹.' Christianity itself also preaches an αὐτάρκεια, a moral independence, but its preaching starts from a due recognition of the facts of human life.

Want of sympathy.

And, while Stoicism is thus paradoxical towards the individual, its view of the mutual relations between man and man is a still greater outrage on humanity. 'In every age the Christian temper has shivered at the touch of Stoic apathy².' Pity, anger, love—all the most powerful social impulses of our nature—are ignored by the Stoic, or at least recognised only to be crushed. There is no attempt to chasten or to guide these affections: they must simply be rooted out. The Stoic ideal is stern, impassive, immovable. As a natural consequence, the genuine Stoic is isolated and selfish: he feels no sympathy with others, and therefore he excites no sympathy in others. Any wide extension of Stoicism was thus rendered impossible by its inherent repulsiveness. It took a firm hold on a few solitary spirits, but it was wholly powerless with the masses.

Stoicism
exclusive and not proselytizing.

Nor indeed can it be said in this respect to have failed in its aim. The true Stoic was too self-contained, too indifferent to the condition of others, to concern himself whether the tenets of his school made many proselytes or few. He wrapped himself up in his self-conceit, declared the world to be mad, and gave himself no more trouble about the matter. His avowal of cosmopolitan principles, his tenet of religious equality, became inoperative, because the springs of sympathy, which alone could make them effective, had been frozen at their source. Where enthusiasm is a weakness and love a delusion, such professions must necessarily be empty verbiage. The temper of Stoicism was essentially aristocratic and exclusive in religion, as it was in politics. While professing the largest comprehension, it was practically the narrowest of all philosophical castes.

3. No distinct belief in man's immortality.

3. Though older philosophers had speculated on the immortality of the soul, and though the belief had been encouraged by some schools of moralists as supplying a most powerful motive for well-doing, yet still it remained for the heathen a vague theory, unascer-

¹ Ecce Homo p. 116.

² Ecce Homo p. 119.

tained and unascertainable. To the Christian alone, when he accepted the fact of Christ's resurrection, did it become an established and incontrovertible truth. Stoicism does not escape the vagueness which overclouds all mere philosophical speculation on this subject. On one point alone were the professors of this school agreed. An eternal existence of the human soul was out of the question. At the great periodic conflagration, when the universe should be fused and the manifold organizations dissolved into chaos, the souls of men must necessarily be involved in the common destruction¹. But within this limit much diversity of opinion prevailed. Some maintained a longer, some a shorter, duration of the soul. Cleanthes said that all men would continue to exist till the conflagration; Chrysippus confined even this limited immortality to the wise². The language of Seneca on this point is both timid and capricious. 'If there be any sense or feeling after death' is his cautious hypothesis, frequently repeated³. 'I was pleasantly engaged,' he writes to his friend Lucilius, 'in enquiring about the eternity of souls, or rather, I should say, in trusting. For I was ready to trust myself to the opinions of great men, who avow rather than prove so very acceptable a thing. I was surrendering myself to this great hope, I was beginning to be weary of myself, to despise the remaining fragments of a broken life, as though I were destined to pass away into that illimitable time, and into the possession of eternity; when I was suddenly aroused by the receipt of your letter, and this beautiful dream vanished⁴.' When again he would console the bereaved mourner, he has no better words of comfort to offer than these: 'Why do I waste away with fond regret for one who either is happy or does not exist at all? It is envy to bewail him if he is happy, and madness if he does not exist⁵.' 'Bear in mind that no evils affect the dead; that the circumstances which make the lower world terrible to us are an idle story.' 'Death is the release and end of all pains.' 'Death is neither a good nor an evil: for that only can be good or evil which

Diversity of opinion among the Stoics.

Seneca's inconsistency and vagueness.

¹ See e.g. Seneca ad Marc., 26, ad Polyb. i. (20).

² Diog. Laert. vii. 157.

³ De Brev. Vit. 18, ad Polyb. 5, 9, Ep. Mor. xxiv. 18, lxx. 24, lxxi. 16. Tertullian (de Resurr. Carn. 1, de Anim. 42) quotes Seneca as saying 'Omnia post mortem finiri, etiam ipsam.'

⁴ Ep. Mor. cii. 2; comp. Ep. Mor. cxvii. 6 'Cum animarum æternitatem disserimus, non leve momentum apud nos habet consensus hominum aut timendum inferos aut colentium.'

⁵ Ad Polyb. 9.

is something.' 'Fortune can retain no hold, where nature has given a release: nor can one be wretched, who does not exist at all'.¹ Afterwards indeed he speaks in a more cheerful strain: 'Eternal rest awaits him leaving this murky and troubled (earth) and migrating to the pure and liquid (sky)²': but such expressions must be qualified by what has gone before. Again in this same treatise, as in other places³, he promises after death an enlarged sphere of knowledge and a limitless field of calm and pure contemplation. But the promise which he gives in one sentence is often modified or retracted in the next; and even where the prospects held out are the brightest, it is not always clear whether he contemplates a continuance of conscious individual existence, or merely the absorption into Universal Being and the impersonal participation in its beauty and order⁴. The views of Epictetus and M. Aurelius are even more cloudy and cheerless than those of Seneca. Immortality, properly so called, has no place in their philosophies.

Importance of the doctrine of Christianity.

Gibbon, in his well-known chapter on the origin and growth of Christianity, singles out the promise of eternal life as among the chief causes which promoted its diffusion. Overlooking much that is offensive in the tone of his remarks, we need not hesitate to accept the statement as substantially true. It is indeed more than questionable whether (as Gibbon implies) the growth of the Church was directly due to the inducements of the offer; for (looking only to self-interest) it has a repulsive as well as an attractive side: but without doubt it added enormously to the moral power of the Gospel in commending it to the hearts and consciences of men. Detering, stimulating, reassuring, purifying and exalting the inward and outward life, 'the power of Christ's resurrection' extends over the whole domain of Christian ethics.

Its indifference to Stoicism.

On the other hand it was a matter of indifference to the Stoic whether he doubted or believed or denied the immortality of man; for the doctrine was wholly external to his creed, and nothing

¹ Ad Marc. 19; comp. Ep. Mor. xxxvi. 10 'Mors nullum habet incommodum: esse enim debet aliquis, cujus sit incommodum,' with the context.

² Ad Marc. 24.

³ Comp. e.g. Ep. Mor. lxxix. 12, lxxxvi. 1, cii. 22, 28 sq.

⁴ Holzherr Der Philosoph L. Annæus

Seneca II. p. 58 sq. (1859) endeavours to show that Seneca is throughout consistent with himself and follows the Platonists rather than the Stoics in his doctrine of the immortality of the soul. I do not see how it is possible, after reading the treatise ad Marciam, to acquit him of inconsistency.

could be lost or gained by the decision. Not life but death was the constant subject of his meditations. His religious director was summoned to his side, not to prepare him for eternity, but to teach him how to die¹. This defect alone would have rendered Stoicism utterly powerless with the masses of men: for the enormous demands which it made on the faith and self-denial of its adherents could not be sustained without the sanction and support of such a belief. The Epicurean motto, 'Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die,' base though it was, had at least this recommendation, that the conclusion did seem to follow from the premisses: but the moral teaching of the Stoic was practically summed up in the paralogism, 'Let us neither eat nor drink, for to-morrow we die,' where no wit of man could bridge over the gulf between the premisses and the conclusion. A belief in man's immortality might have saved the Stoic from many intellectual paradoxes and much practical perplexity: but then it would have made him other than a Stoic. He had a profound sense of the reign of moral order in the universe. Herein he was right. But the postulate of man's immortality alone reconciles this belief with many facts of actual experience; and, refusing to extend his views beyond the present life, he was obliged to misstate or deny these facts in order to save his thesis². He staunchly maintained the inherent quality of actions as good or bad (irrespective of their consequences), and he has deserved the gratitude of mankind as the champion of a morality of principles. But he falsely supposed himself bound in consequence to deny any force to the utilitarian aspect of ethics, as though it were irreconcilable with his own doctrine; and so he was led into the wildest paradoxes, calling good evil and evil good. The meeting-point of these two distinct lines of view is beyond the grave, and he refused to carry his range of vision so far. It was inconsistent with his tenets to hold out the hope of a future life as an incentive to well-doing and a dissuasive from sin; for he wholly ignored the idea of retribution.

¹ Socrates (or Plato) said that true philosophers οὐδὲν ἄλλο αὐτοὶ ἐπιτηδεύουσιν ἢ ἀποθνήσκειν τε καὶ τεθνάναι (Phædo 64 A). The Stoic, by accepting the ἀποθνήσκειν and forgetting the τεθνάναι, robbed the saying of its virtue.

² Butler argues from the fact that

'the divine government which we experience ourselves under in the present state, taken alone, is allowed not to be the perfection of moral government.' The Stoic denied what the Christian philosopher assumes, and contradicted experience by maintaining that it is perfect, taken alone.

So far, there was more substantial truth and greater moral power in the crude and gross conceptions of an afterworld embodied in the popular mythology which was held up to scorn by him, than in the imposing philosophy which he himself had devised to supplant them.

4. Absence of a historical basis.

4. Attention was directed above to an instructive parallel which Seneca's language presents to our Lord's image of the vine and the branches¹. Precepts, writes the philosopher, wither unless they are grafted in a sect. By this confession Seneca virtually abandons the position of self-isolation and self-sufficiency, which the Stoic assumes. He felt vaguely the want of some historical basis, some bond of social union, in short some principle of cohesion, which should give force and vitality to his ethical teaching. No mere abstract philosophy has influenced or can influence permanently large masses of men. A Bible and a Church—a sacred record and a religious community—are primary conditions of extensive and abiding success. An isolated spirit here and there may have dispensed with such aids; but, as a social power, as a continuous agency, mere doctrine, however imposing, will for the most part be ineffective without such a support.

A sacred record and a religious community necessary.

Christianity centres in a Person.

So far we have been speaking of conditions of success which were wanting indeed to Stoicism, but which nevertheless are not peculiar to Christianity. All creeds, which have secured any wide and lasting allegiance, have had their sacred books and their religious organization. But our Lord's language, of which Seneca's image is a partial though unconscious echo, points to the one distinguishing feature of Christianity. It is not a record nor a community, but a Person, whence the sap spreads to the branches and ripens into the rich clusters. I have already alluded to Gibbon's account of the causes which combined to promote the spread of the Church. It will seem strange to any one who has at all felt the spirit of the Gospel, that a writer, enumerating the forces to which the dissemination and predominance of Christianity were due, should omit all mention of the Christ. One might have thought it impossible to study with common attention the records of the Apostles and martyrs of the first ages or of the saints and heroes of the later Church, without seeing that the consciousness of personal union with Christ the source of the moral power of Christianity.

¹ See above, p. 283.

Him, the belief in His abiding presence, was the mainspring of their actions and the fountain of all their strength. This is not a preconceived theory of what should have happened, but a bare statement of what stands recorded on the pages of history. In all ages and under all circumstances, the Christian life has ever radiated from this central fire. Whether we take St Peter or St Paul, St Francis of Assisi or John Wesley, whether Athanasius or Augustine, Anselm or Luther, whether Boniface or Francis Xavier, here has been the impulse of their activity and the secret of their moral power. Their lives have illustrated the parable of the vine and the branches.

It is this which differentiates Christianity from all other religions, and still more from all abstract systems of philosophy. Those who assume the entire aim and substance of the Gospel to have been the inculcation of moral precepts, and who therefore rest its claims solely or chiefly on the purity of its ethical code, often find themselves sorely perplexed, when they stumble upon some noble and true utterance of Jewish or Heathen antiquity before the coming of Christ. A maxim of a Stoic philosopher or a Rabbinical schoolman, a saying of Plato or Confucius, startles them by its resemblance to the teaching of the Gospel. Such perplexity is founded on a twofold error. On the one hand they have not realised the truth that the same Divine Power was teaching mankind before He was made flesh: while on the other they have failed to see what is involved in this incarnation and its sequel. To those who have felt how much is implied in St John's description of the pre-incarnate Word as the life and light of men; to those who allow the force of Tertullian's appeal to the 'witness of a soul naturally Christian'; to those who have sounded the depths of Augustine's bold saying, that what we now call the Christian religion existed from the dawn of the human race, though it only began to be named Christian when Christ came in the flesh'; to those who can respond to the sentiment of the old English poem,

'Many man for Cristes love
Was martired in Romaine,
Er any Cristendom was knowe there Or any eros honoured';

it cannot be a surprise to find such flashes of divine truth in men

¹ Retract. i. 13.

Distinctive feature of Christianity.

Not a moral code

who lived before the coming of our Lord or were placed beyond the reach of the Gospel. The significance of Christ's moral precepts does not lose but gain by the admission: for we learn to view Him no longer as one wholly apart from our race, but recognising in His teaching old truths which 'in manhood darkly join,' we shall only be the more prompt to 'Yield all blessing to the name Of Him that made them current coin.'

but a principle of life centred in a Person.

But the mere ethical teaching, however important, is the least important, because the least distinctive part of Christianity. If there be any meaning in the saying that Christ appeared to 'bring life and immortality to light,' if the stedfast convictions of St Peter and St Paul and St John were not a delusion, and their lives not built upon a lie, then obviously a deeper principle is involved. The moral teaching and the moral example of our Lord will ever have the highest value in their own province; but the core of the Gospel does not lie here. Its distinctive character is, that in revealing a Person it reveals also a principle of life—the union with God in Christ, apprehended by faith in the present and assured to us hereafter by the Resurrection. This Stoicism could not give; and therefore its dogmas and precepts were barren. Its noblest branches bore neither flowers nor fruit, because there was no parent stem from which they could draw fresh sap.

The Letters of Paul and Seneca.

THE spurious correspondence between the Apostle and the philosopher to which reference is made in the preceding essay, consists of fourteen letters, the 1st, 3rd, 5th, 7th, 9th, 11th, 12th, and 13th written in the name of Seneca, and the 2nd, 4th, 6th, 8th, 10th, and 14th of St Paul. In the address of the 6th the name of Lucilius is added to that of Seneca, and in the same way in the address of the 7th Theophilus is named along with St Paul.

The correspondence described.

I have not thought it worth while to reprint these letters, as they may be read conveniently in the recent edition of Seneca's works by F. Haase (III. p. 476 sq.) included in Teubner's series, and are to be found likewise in several older editions of this author. They have been printed lately also in Fleury's St Paul et Sénèque (II. p. 300 sq.) and in Aubertin's Sénèque et St Paul (p. 409 sq.), and still more recently in an article by Kraus, entitled Der Briefwechsel Pauli mit Seneca, in the Theologische Quartalschrift XLIX. p. 601 (1867).

Editions of the letters.

The great popularity of this correspondence in the ages before the Reformation is shown by the large number of extant MSS. Fleury, making use of the common catalogues, has enumerated about sixty; and probably a careful search would largely increase the number. The majority, as is usual in such cases, belong to the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth centuries, but two at least are as early as the ninth. Haase used some fresh collations, from which however he complains that little was to be got (p. xxii); and Fleury also collated three MSS from Paris and one from Toulouse. Haase directed attention to the two most ancient, Ambrosianus C. 90 and Argentoratensis C. vi. 5, both belonging to the ninth century (which had not yet been examined), but had no opportunity of collating them himself. Collations from these (together with another later Strassburg MS, Argentoratensis C. vi. 7) were afterwards used by Kraus for his text, which is thus constructed of better materials than any other. But after all, it remains in an unsatisfactory state, which the worthlessness of the letters themselves may well excuse.

The MSS and collations.

This correspondence was probably forged in the fourth century, either to recommend Seneca to Christian readers or to recommend Christianity to students of Seneca. In favour of this view may be urged the fact that in several MSS these spurious letters precede the genuine works of Seneca¹. Nor does any other motive seem consistent with the letters themselves; for they have no doctrinal bearing at all, and no historical interest of Probable motive of the forgery.

¹ As for instance Argent. C. vi. 5 described by Kraus. So in Burn. 251 (British Museum), which I have examined, they are included in a collection of genuine and spurious works of sufficient importance to account for the forgery. They are made up chiefly of an interchange of compliments between the Apostle and the philosopher; and the only historical thread which can be said to run through them is the endeavour of Seneca to gain the ear of Nero for the writings of St Paul.

Seneca, being themselves preceded by the notice of Jerome and followed by the first of the epistles to Lucilius. It is not uncommon to find them immediately before the genuine epistles.

Reference to the letters by Jerome, It is commonly said that St Jerome, who first mentions these letters, had no suspicion that they were spurious. This statement however is exaggerated, for he does not commit himself to any opinion at all about their genuineness. He merely says, that he 'should not have given a place to Seneca in a catalogue of saints, unless challenged to do so by those letters of Paul to Seneca and from Seneca to Paul which are read by very many persons' (de Vir. Ill. 12 'nisi me illæ epistolæ provocarent quæ leguntur a plurimis'). When it is remembered how slight an excuse serves to bring other names into his list, such as Philo, Josephus, and Justus Tiberiensis, we cannot lay any stress on the vague language which he uses in this case. The more probable inference is that he did not deliberately accept them as genuine. Indeed, if he had so accepted them, his profound silence about them elsewhere would be wholly inexplicable.

Augustine, St Augustine, as generally happens in questions of historical criticism, repeats the language of Jerome and perhaps had not seen the letters (Epist. cliii. 14 'Seneca cujus quedam ad Paulum apostolum leguntur epistolæ¹'). Throughout the middle ages they are mentioned or quoted, and later writers. most frequently as genuine, but occasionally with an expression of doubt, until the revival of learning when the light of criticism rapidly dispelled the illusion².

These letters a manifest forgery. As they are now universally allowed to be spurious, it will be unnecessary to state at length the grounds of their condemnation. It is sufficient to say that the letters are inane and unworthy throughout; that the style of either correspondent is unlike his genuine writings; that the relations between the two, as there represented, are highly improbable; and lastly, that the chronological notices (which however are absent in some important mss) are wrong in almost every instance. Thus, independently of the unbroken silence of three centuries and a half about this correspondence, internal evidence alone is sufficient to condemn them hopelessly.

Yet the writer is not ignorant nor wholly careless. Yet the writer is not an ignorant man. He has read part of Seneca and is aware of the philosopher's relations with Lucilius; he is acquainted with the story of Castor and Pollux appearing to one Vatinius (or Vatienus); he can talk glibly of the gardens of Sallust; he is acquainted with the character of Caligula whom he properly calls Gaius Cæsar; he is even aware of the Jewish sympathies of the empress Poppæa and makes her regard St Paul as a renegade³; and lastly, he seems to have had before him some account of the Neronian fire and persecution⁴ which is no

¹ Another passage quoted above, p. 28 note 3, in which Augustine remarks on Seneca's silence about the Christians, is inconsistent with a conviction of the genuineness of these letters.

² See Fleury i. p. 269 sq. for a catena of references.

³ Ep. 5 'Indignatio dominæ, quod a ritu et secta veteri recesseris et [te] aliorum converteris'; comp. Ep. 8, where however the reading is doubtful.

⁴ Yet there must be some mistake in the numbers, which appear too small.

longer extant, for he speaks of 'Christians and Jews' being punished as the authors of the conflagration and mentions that 'a hundred and thirty-two houses and six insulæ were burnt in six days.'

Moreover I believe he attempts, though he succeeds ill in the attempt, to make a difference in the styles of Seneca and St Paul, the writing of the latter being more ponderous. Unfortunately he betrays himself by representing Seneca as referring more than once to St Paul's bad style; and in one letter the philosopher mentions sending the Apostle a book de Copia Verborum, obviously for the purpose of improving his Latin.

I mention these facts, because they bear upon a theory maintained by some modern critics¹, that these letters are not the same with those to which Jerome and Augustine refer; that they had before them a genuine correspondence between St Paul and Seneca, which has since perished; and that the extant epistles were forged later (say about the ninth century), being suggested by the notices in these fathers and invented in consequence to supply their place. The only specious arguments advanced in favour of this view, so far as I know, are these: (1) A man like Jerome could not possibly have believed the extant correspondence to be genuine, for the forgery is transparent; (2) The de Copia Verborum is a third title to a work otherwise known as de Formula Honestæ Vitæ or de Quatuor Virtutibus, written by Martinus Bragensis or Dumiensis († circ. A.D. 580), but ascribed in many mss to Seneca. Sufficient time therefore must have elapsed since this date to allow the false title and false ascription to take the place of the true and to be generally circulated and recognised².

Theory of some modern critics.

The arguments for this view stated

To both these arguments a ready answer may be given: (1) There is no reason to suppose that Jerome did believe the correspondence to be genuine, as I have already shown. He would hardly have spoken so vaguely, if he had accepted them as genuine or even inclined to this belief. (2) A much better account can be given of the false title and ascription of Martin's treatise, if we suppose that they arose out of the allusion in the letters, than on the converse hypothesis that they were prior to and suggested this allusion. This Martin, whose works appear to have had a very large circulation in the middle ages, wrote on kindred subjects and seems occasionally to have abridged and adapted Seneca's writings. For this reason his works were commonly bound up with those of Seneca, and in some instances came to be ascribed to the Stoic philosopher. This is the case at all events with the de Moribus, as well as the de Quatuor Virtutibus, and perhaps other spurious treatises bearing the name of Seneca may be assigned to the same author. A copy of the de Quatuor Virtutibus, either designedly abridged or accidentally mutilated, and on this account wanting the title, was bound up so as to precede or follow the correspondence of Paul and Seneca³; and, as Seneca in one of these

The arguments for this view stated

Martinus Bragensis.

Account of de Copia Verborum.

¹ An account of these views will be found in Fleury II. p. 225 sq. He himself holds that the letters read by these fathers were not the same with our correspondence, but questions whether those letters were genuine.

² This argument is urged by Fleury

II. p. 267 sq. The de Formula Honestæ Vitæ is printed in Haase's edition of Seneca (III. p. 468) together with other spurious works.

³ It is found in some extant mss (e.g. Flor. Pl. xlv. Cod. iv) immediately before the letters, and it may perhaps letters mentions sending the de Copia Verborum, a later transcriber assumed that the neighbouring treatise must be the work in question, and without reflecting gave it this title¹. Whether the forger of the correspondence invented an imaginary title, or whether a standard work bearing this name, either by Seneca himself or by some one else, was in general circulation when he wrote, we have no means of deciding; but the motive in the allusion is clearly the improvement of St Paul's Latin, of which Seneca more than once complains. On the other hand the de Quatuor Virtutibus is, as its name implies, a treatise on the cardinal virtues. An allusion to this treatise therefore would be meaningless; nor indeed has any reasonable explanation been given, how it got the title de Copia Verborum, on the supposition that this title was prior to the allusion in the correspondence and was not itself suggested thereby, for it is wholly alien to the subject of the treatise.

Direct reasons against this theory.

But other strong and (as it seems to me) convincing arguments may be brought against this theory. (1) Extant mss of the correspondence date from the ninth century, and in these the text is already in a corrupt state. (2) The historical knowledge which the letters show could hardly have occur in some others immediately after them. [Since the first edition appeared, in which this conjecture was hazarded, I have found the treatise immediately after the letters, Bodl. Laud. Misc. 383, fol. 77 a, where it is anonymous.]

¹ The work, when complete, consists of (1) A dedication in Martin's name to Miro king of Galicia, in which he mentions the title of the book Formula Vitæ Honestæ; (2) A short paragraph enumerating the four cardinal virtues; (3) A discussion of these several virtues and the measure to be observed in each. In the mss, so far as I have learnt from personal inspection and from notices in other writers, it is found in three different forms; (1) Complete (e.g. Cambridge Univ. Libr. Dd. xv. 21; Bodl. Laud. Misc. 444, fol. 146), in which case there is no possibility of mistaking its authorship; (2) Without the dedicatory preface, so that it begins Quatuor virtutum species etc. In this form it is generally entitled de Quatuor Virtutibus and ascribed to Seneca. So it is for instance in three British Museum mss, Burn. 251 fol. 33 a (xiiith cent.; the treatise being mutilated at the end and concluding 'In has ergo maculas prudentia immensurata perducet'), Burn. 360, fol. 35 a (xivth cent.?), and Harl. 233 (xiiith or xivth cent.?, where however the general title is wanting and the treatise has the special heading Seneca de prudentia). The transcriber of Arund. 249 (xvth cent.) also gives it in this form, but is aware of the true author, for the heading is Incipit tractatus libri honeste vite editus a Martino episcopo Qui a multis intitilatur de quatuor virtutibus et attribuitur Senecæ; but he ends it Explicit tractatus de quatuor virtutibus Anni Senecæ Cordubensis, as he doubtless found it in the copy which he transcribed. In Bodl. Laud. Lat. 86, fol. 58 a, where it occurs in this form, it is ascribed to its right author; while again in Bodl. Laud. Misc. 280, fol. 117 a, it is anonymous. These mss I have examined. (3) It occurs without either the dedicatory preface or the general paragraph on the four virtues, and some extraneous matter is added at the end. Only in this form, so far as I can discover, does it bear the strange title de Verborum Copia. So in one of the Gale mss at Trinity College Cambridge (o. 3. 31) it begins 'Senecæ de quatuor virtutibus primo(?) de prudentia. Quisquis prudentiam...' and ends '... jactura que per negligentiam fit. Explicit liber Senecæ de verborum copia'; and the ms described by Haase (iii. p. xxii) belongs to the same type. These facts accord with the account of the title which I have suggested in the text.

been possessed, or turned to such account, by a writer later than the fourth or fifth century. (3) Jerome quotes obliquely a passage from the letters, and this passage is found in the extant correspondence. To this it is replied, that the forger, taking the notice of Jerome as his starting-point, would necessarily insert the quotation to give colour to his forgery. But I think it may be assumed in this case that the pseudo-Seneca would have preserved the words of Jerome accurately or nearly so; whereas, though the sense is the same, the difference in form is considerable¹. It may be added also that the sentiment is in entire keeping with the pervading tone of the letters, and has no appearance of being introduced for a distinct purpose. (4) It is wholly inconceivable that a genuine correspondence of the Apostle could have escaped notice for three centuries and a half; and not less inconceivable that, having once been brought to light at the end of the fourth and beginning of the fifth century, it should again have fallen into oblivion and been suffered to disappear. This theory therefore may be confidently rejected.

¹ The reference in St Jerome is '(Seneca) optare se dicit ejus esse loci apud suos, cujus sit Paulus apud Chris-tianos.' The words stand in the letters (no. 11), '[Uti] nam qui meus, tuus apud te locus, qui tuus, velim ut meus.'

INDEX.

- AARONIC priesthood; see priesthood accumulated expressions in St Paul,
 i. 9, 14, 23, 27, ii. 2, iii. 9, iv. 1, 2, 17
 Acte, p. 21
 Acts of the Apostles; passages explained, p. 49 (xvi. 12), 51 (xvi. 13), 302 (xvii. 28), 34 (xxvii. 2), 7, 101 (xxviii. 16), 9 (xxviii. 30); ending not abrupt, p. 3; last chapters authentic,
 p. 15; account of St Paul compared with his epistles, p. 2, 37 sq.; account of Philippi, p. 49
 advent of Christ; its nearness, i. 6, 10,
 ii. 17, iii. 1, iv. 5
 Aelius Publius Julius, p. 215
 Aerius, p. 231
 Africa, episcopacy in, p. 222; synods of, p. 222, 240; sacerdotalism in, p. 259 Agrippa (Herod, I); his imprisonment and release, p. 101 sq.
 Agrippa (Herod, II); his dispute with the Jews and relations with Festus,
 p. 7
 Alexander (the Great); his view of his mission, p. 304; effects of his conquests, p. 272, 304
 Alexander (of Alexandria), p. 229
 Alexander (of Rome), p. 219 sq.
 Alexandria, early foundation of the Church of, p. 223; state of religion in, ib.; ordination at, p. 224; episcopacy in, p. 223 sq., 229 sq.; patriarch of, 229 sq.; sacerdotalism at, p. 252, 255 Alexandrian Judaism and the Gospel,
 p. 300 sq.
 Aliturus, p. 6, 171
 altar, use of the word, p. 249, 260, 263 Ambrosiaster (Hilary); on the Divinity of Christ, p. 129; on the priesthood,
 p. 183; on the identity of 'bishops' and 'presbyters,' p. 97; on episcopacy, p. 201 sq., 205, 227; on the Alexandrian episcopate, p. 229; preserves a tradition about St Paul,
 p. 101
 amphitheatre, metaphor from the, i.
 27, 28
 Amplias, p. 10, 172
 Ancient Syriac Documents, p. 75, 209, 219, 259
 Ancyra, Council of, p. 230 sq.
 Andrew (St) in Asia Minor, p. 200
 Andronicus and Junias, p. 10, 11, 16
 Anencletus, p. 218 sq.
 angels; of a synagogue, p. 197; in the Apocalypse, p. 197 sq.
 Anicetus, p. 218, 220 sq.
 anthropomorphism, p. 130
 Antichrist, p. 1
 antinomianism rebuked, p. 67, 69, iii.
 12, 13, 15, 18
 Antioch, bishops of, p. 208 sq.
 Antonia, p. 101 sq.
 Antonius Melissa, p. 251
 aorist; epistolary, p. 36, 137, ii. 25, 28; participle of, ii. 7; pluperfect sense of, iv. 15; with perfect, iii. 12
 Apelles, p. 17, 171, 172
 Apocalypse, angels in the, p. 197 sq.; date of, p. 198; reference to persecution in, p. 24; ii. 20 interpreted,
 p. 198

- Apostles; not bishops, p. 194; supervision of churches by, p. 196; Second Council of the, p. 200 sq.
- Apostolic Constitutions, p. 257, 261
- Apostolic delegates, p. 197
- appeals to Cæsar, p. 4, 30
- appellatio, p. 7
- Appian way, monuments of the, p. 169 sq.
- Aquila and Priscilla; their movements, p. 176; in Rome, p. 10, 16, 171
- Aratus, p. 302
- Archippus, p. 30
- Areopagus; see Paul (St)
- Aristarchus, p. 11, 18, 34, 36
- Aristobulus, p. 17, 173
- Aristotle's use of μορφή and synonyms, p. 126 sq.
- article (the definite); omission of, i. 1, 5, 6, iii. 9; type denoted by, p. 95; uses of, ii. 6, 21, 30, iii. 9
- Asia Minor; Apostles settled in, p. 200; episcopacy in, p. 209 sq.; sides with Cyprian, p. 240
- aspirates (anomalous), ii. 23
- Atheism, a name of Christianity, p. 22, 23
- Athens; episcopacy at, p. 214 sq.
- Attic dialect exceptional, ii. 14
- Aubertin (C.), Sénèque et St Paul, p. 276, 297
- Augustine (St); on Seneca, p. 28; on episcopacy, p. 228; on pre-Christian Christianity, p. 325
- Augustus; his policy as to Philippi, p. 49, 50
- Aurelius (M. Antoninus); his character, p. 296, 315; his modified Stoicism, p. 315, 316 sq.; defects of his teaching, p. 316; persecution of the Christians, p. 315 sq.; supposed relations with rabbi Jehuda, p. 316; notice of Christianity, p. 28, 316; on immortality, p. 322
- ἀγιοι, i. 1
- ἀγνός, p. 63, iv. 8
- ἀγών, i. 30
- ἀδελφοί (emphatic), iii. 13
- ἐδημονεῖν, ii. 26
- αἰσθησις, αἰσθητήρια, i. 9
- αἰσχύνη, παρρησία, i. 20
- ἀκαιρεῖν (-ρεῖσθαι), iv. 10
- ἀκέραιος, ii. 15
- ἀληθής, iv. 8
- ἀλλὰ μὲν οὖν, iii. 8
- ἄλυστις (δεσμός, πέδη), p. 8
- ἄμεμπτος, iii. 6
- ἄμωμος (-μητος), ii. 15
- ἀναθάλλειν (transitive), iv. 10
- ἀναλύειν, i. 23
- ἀναπληροῦν, ii. 30
- ἀνάστασις (ἐξανάστασις), iii. 11
- ἄνω, iii. 15
- ἅπαξ καὶ δις, iv. 16
- ἀπεκδέχεσθαι, iii. 20
- ἀπέχειν, iv. 18
- ἀποθανεῖν, i. 21
- ἀποκαταδοκία, i. 20
- ἀπολογία, i. 7
- ἀπόστολος (delegate), ii. 25, p. 194
- ἀπρόσκοπος, i. 10
- ἄρετή, iv. 8
- ἄρπαγμα (ἄρπαγμὸν) ἡγείσθαι etc., ii. 6, p. 131 sq.
- ἄρχισυνάγωγος, p. 205
- αὐτόρκεια, iv. 11
- αὐτὸ τοῦτο, i. 6; τὸ αὐτό, ii. 18
- αὐτοῦ etc. (αὐτοῦ etc.), use of, iii. 21
- ἀφελπίζειν, ii. 23
- ἀφορᾶν (-ιδεῖν), ii. 23
- Bacchanalian conspiracy, p. 26
- Bacchyllus, p. 214
- Barnabas, Epistle of, p. 223
- Baur (C. F.), p. 73, 168, 175, 231, 276, 294
- Benjamin, tribe of, iii. 5
- bishops; see Episcopate
- book of life, iv. 3
- Bruttius, p. 22
- Bucherian Catalogue, p. 219
- Burrus, the prætorian prefect, p. 3, 5, 8, 299
- Butler (Bp.), p. 323
- βεβαίως, i. 7
- βλέπετε, iii. 2
- Cæsarea; evangelization of, p. 30; St Paul's captivity at, p. 29, 30

- Cæsar's household, p. 19, 29, 32, 98, 169 sq., iv. 22
- Caius or Gaius (the emperor) and Agrippa, p. 101 sq.
- Caius or Gaius (St Paul's host), p. 213
- Caius or Gaius (of Macedonia), p. 61
- Callistus, p. 221
- Calvin's distinction of lay and teaching elders, p. 193
- Carthage; see Africa
- Cassius of Tyre, p. 207
- Catholic Church, p. 202, 205
- Cato the younger; his character, p. 308 sq.
- chains of prisoners, p. 8
- chazan, his duties, etc., p. 187 sq.
- chiasm, i. 16
- Chrestus, Chrestianus, p. 16
- Christ; divinity and pre-existence of, ii. 6 sq., p. 129 sq., 135; universal sovereignty of, iii. 21; high priesthood of, p. 249; an object of worship, ii. 10; the Word, p. 290, 301, 325; the true vine, p. 324 sq., 326; obedience of, ii. 8, 12; righteousness in, iii. 9; membership in, ii. 19, p. 305 sq.; communion with His sufferings and death, iii. 10; see Christianity, Church, Resurrection, etc.
- Christian ministry, priesthood, etc.; see ministry, priesthood, etc.
- Christianity, distinguishing feature of, p. 324 sq.; its true character, p. 325 sq.
- Christians, accusations against, p. 23, 26; silence of heathen writers about, p. 27, 28
- chorepiscopi, p. 230 sq.
- Chrysippus, p. 273 sq., 307, 321
- Chrysostom (St); on bishops and presbyters, p. 97; on prætorium, ib.; confused interpretation of, 134 sq.; misunderstood, p. 94
- Church of Christ; ideal of, p. 179 sq.; its practical limitations, ib.; influence of this ideal, p. 181; false ideas prevailing in, p. 266
- Cicero's letters, rate of travelling in, p. 37
- circumcision, metaphor of, iii. 3
- citizenship; St Paul's metaphor of the heavenly, p. 51, 305 sq., i. 27, iii. 20; rights of Roman, ii. 8, p. 304
- Clarus (of Ptolemais), p. 207
- Claudian, his religious indifference, p. 27
- Claudius Apollinaris, p. 211
- Cleanthes, character of, p. 308; hymn of, p. 302, 318; on immortality, p. 321
- Clemens (Alexandrinus); on the ministry, p. 210, 224, 227, 252 sq.; no sacerdotalism in, p. 253
- Clemens (Flavius); see Flavius
- Clemens (Romanus); character of, p. 166, 168; his date, p. 166; connexion with St Peter and St Paul, p. 167; recent criticisms on, p. 167 sq.; a Greek, p. 221; his office, p. 216 sq., 219; occasion of his letter, p. 214; its purport and contents, p. 203, 213, 247 sq.; passages discussed, p. 201, 203, 247 sq.; resemblances to Philipians in, p. 74; no sacerdotalism in, p. 247 sq.; use of term 'offerings' in, p. 260; bishops and presbyters identified in, p. 95 sq., 203, 216
- Clement, St Paul's fellow-labourer, p. 166 sq.; the name common, p. 167
- Clementine Homilies, etc.; anthropomorphism in, p. 130; not sacerdotal, p. 258; on episcopacy, p. 207, 209, 236; position of St James in, p. 195, 206; on the Canaanitish woman, iii. 2
- clergy, distinguished from laity, p. 244 sq., 247; origin of the term, p. 244 sq.; see κλήρος
- Cletus, p. 219
- clubs; see confraternities
- collection of alms; see Macedonia, Philippians
- colonies (Roman), p. 50
- Colossians, Epistle to the; written from Rome, p. 12; not from Cæsarea, p. 29, 30; date of, 30 sq.; later than Philippians, p. 44; genuineness of,

- p. 18; Judaizers mentioned in, p. 17 sq.; Gnosticism refuted in, p. 41 comparative; force of, ii. 28; accumulated, i. 23 compresbyterus, p. 228 confraternities, p. 93, 192
 conscientia, p. 301
 Corinth, the Church of; St Paul's dealings with, p. 196; episcopacy in, p. 213 sq.; lost letters to, p. 137; see Clemens Romanus
 Corinthians, Epistles to the; no sacerdotalism in, p. 244; passages interpreted (1 Cor. v. 3 sq., 2 Cor. ii. 6), p. 196
 Crenides, p. 46, 51
 Crete, episcopacy in, p. 215 crucifixion, horrors of, ii. 8 custodia, kinds of, p. 7, 8, 101 sq.
 Cyprian; his mode of addressing presbyters, p. 228; view of the episcopate, p. 238 sq., 241 sq.; controversies of, p. 239 sq.; his character and work, p. 238 sq.; genuineness of his letters, p. 240; sacerdotalism of, p. 256 sq.
 Cyril (of Alexandria), wrongly interpreted, p. 136 καθιδεῖν, ii. 23
καί, answering to ὡς, i. 20; after εἰ etc. i. 22; displaced, iv. 12; doubled, iv. 16
Καναρίτης, p. 301
καρδία, iv. 7
καρπὸς δικαιοσύνης, i. 11
κατά, iv. 11
καταλαμβάνειν, iii. 12 κατατέμνειν (-τομή), iii. 2 κατεργάζεσθαι, ii. 12
καυχᾶσθαι, καύχημα, etc., i. 26 κεῖσθαι εἰς, i. 16
κενοδοξία, ii. 3
κλήρος (κληροῦν, etc.), p. 245 sq.
κοιλία, iii. 19
κοινωνία, i. 5 κοπιᾶν, ii. 16 κόσμος, ii. 15
κύνες, iii. 2
κύριος, a title of Jesus, ii. 9, 11; κύριε, in heathen writers, p. 312 χαίρειν, ii. 8, iii. 1, iv. 4 χάρις (ἡ), i. 7
χορτάζειν, iv. 12
χωρεπίσκοπος, p. 230
 Damascene (John), p. 251 dative (of relation), iii. 5 Datos or Daton, p. 46 deacons; see diaconate deaconesses, p. 189
 Demas, p. 12
 Demetrius of Alexandria, p. 230
 De Wette; false interpretations of, p. 129, 130 diaconate; its establishment, p. 185; its novelty, p. 187 sq.; limitation to seven, p. 186 sq.; its functions, p. 187 sq.; teaching incidental to, p. 188; extension to Gentile Churches, p. 187 sq.
 Dionysius, of Alexandria, p. 229
 Dionysius the Areopagite, p. 214 sq.
 Dionysius of Corinth quoted, p. 212, 214 sq., 221
 Divinity of Christ; see Christ dogs, a term of reproach, iii. 2, 8
 Domitian, persecution of, p. 22
 Domitilla; see Flavia
 Drusus, imprisonment of, p. 101
duumviri, p. 50
δέ, iv. 10
δέησις (προσευχή), iv. 6 διά, with accus., iii. 7, 8; διά φθόνον, i. 15; διά (ἐκ) πίστεως, iii. 9 διάδῃμα (στέφανος), iv. 1 διαλογισμός, ii. 14
διαφέροντα (τά), i. 10 διστραμμένος, ii. 15
διὸ καί, ii. 9
διώκειν (καταλαμβάνειν), iii. 12 δοκεῖν, iii. 4
δοκιμή, ii. 22
δόσις καὶ λήμψις, iv. 15
δύναμις (ἐνέργεια), iii. 21
 Ecce Homo quoted, p. 306, 319, 320
 Egnatian road, p. 34, 36, 37, 48
 Egnatius the Stoic, p. 282
 Egypt, episcopate of, p. 230

- Eleutherus, p. 221
 ellipsis, i. 22, ii. 3, iii. 13
 Epænetus, p. 10, 176
 Epaphras, p. 11; see Epaphroditus
 Epaphroditus (Nero's freedman), p. 21, 311
 Epaphroditus (St Paul's friend); his journeys between Rome and Philippi, 35 sq.; bears alms to St Paul, p. 11, 61, ii. 25 sq.; his sickness, etc., p. 36, 61, ii. 30; distinguished from Epaphras, p. 60; a common name in Macedonia, and elsewhere, p. 61, ii. 25; probable allusion to, iv. 3
 Ephesians, Epistle to the; a circular letter, p. 12, 138; written from Rome, p. 12; not from Caesarea, p. 29, 30; date of, p. 30 sq.; later than Philippians, p. 44 sq.; Gnosticism refuted in, p. 41; hymn quoted in, p. 44; genuineness of, p. 41, 44; supposed fragment of another epistle, p. 176
 Epictetus; his earnestness and piety, p. 311 sq.; his theology and ethics, p. 314; modified Stoicism of, p. 317; his places of abode, p. 312; coincidences with the N. T., p. 296, 312 sq.; especially St Paul, p. 314; his notice of Christianity, p. 316; said to be a Christian, p. 21; views of immortality, p. 322
 Epicurus; sayings of, p. 279, 285, 287; admired by Seneca, p. 290; his system, p. 270 sq.; its Greek origin, p. 271; Epicurean ethics basely consistent, p. 323 episcopate; bishops not the same as Apostles, p. 193 sq.; episcopate developed from presbytery, p. 194 sq., 205, 225 sq.; preparatory steps towards, p. 196 sq.; causes of development, p. 199, 204, 232 sq.; gradual progress of, p. 203 sq., 225, 232 sq.; first matured in Asia Minor, p. 200, 204 sq., 210 sq., 225; episcopate of Jerusalem, p. 195, 206 sq.; of other churches, p. 199, 207 sq.; prevalence of episcopacy, p. 225; ordination confined to bishops, p. 230 sq.; foreign correspondence entrusted to them, p. 220; their mode of addressing presbyters, p. 94 sq., 228; they represent the universal Church, p. 241; their increased power involves no principle, p. 242; see ἐπίσκοπος, synods, Clementine Homilies, etc.
 Essenes, not sacerdotal, p. 258
 Evarestus, p. 219, 220
 Evodia, iv. 2, p. 168
 Evodius, p. 168, 208
 Eusebius; on 2nd Apostolic Council, p. 200 sq.; his list of bishops of Jerusalem, p. 206 sq.; of Rome, p. 166, 219; of Alexandria, p. 223
 Eutychius (patriarch of Alexandria); his testimony, p. 229 sq.
 Ewald; on Philippians, p. 68; on Romans, p. 175 Ἑβραῖος (Ἰουδαῖος), iii. 5
 εἰ interrogative, i. 22; with conjunctive, iii. 11; εἰ πως, ib.
 εἶδος (μορφή, ἰδέα), p. 126 sq.
 εἰλικρινής, i. 10
 εἰς, uses of, iii. 14, iv. 16
 εἴτε...εἴτε with participles, i. 27 ἐκ, uses of, i. 23, iii. 5 ἕκαστος, ἑκάστοι, ii. 4
 ἐλπίς (aspirated), ii. 23
 ἐν, repeated, i. 26; pregnant use of, iv. 19 ἐν δέ, iii. 13
 ἐνάρχεσθαι, i. 6
 ἐνέργεια (δύναμις), iii. 21 ἐνεργεῖν, ii. 12
 ἔντερα (σπλάγχνα), i. 8 ἐξανόστασις, iii. 11
 ἐξομολογεῖσθαι, ii. 11
 ἐπεκτείνεσθαι, iii. 14
 ἐπέχειν, ii. 16
 ἐπί, uses of, ii. 17, 27 ἐπίγνωσις, i. 9
 ἐπικητής, iv. 5
 ἐπιζητεῖν, iv. 17
 ἐπιμένειν with dative, i. 24 ἐπιποθεῖν, i. 8, ii. 26, p. 2 ἐπιπόθητος, iv. 1
 ἐπισκοπή, p. 94
 ἐπίσκοπος; various uses of, p. 93, 192;

- = πρεσβύτερος, p. 93 sq., 191 sq., 231; see episcopate
 ἐπιστολή (ἐπιστολαί), p. 138 sq.
 ἐπιτελεῖν, i. 6
 ἐπιχορηγία, i. 19
 ἔργον (τό), ii. 30
 ἐριθεία, i. 17, ii. 3 ἐρῶ (future), iv. 4 ἐρωτᾶν, iv. 3
 ἐτέρως, iii. 15
 εὐάρεστος τῷ Θεῷ, iv. 18
 εὐδοκία, i. 15, ii. 13
 -εἶσθαι (termination), ii. 30
 Εὐδοδία, iv. 2
 εὐρίσκεσθαι, iii. 9
 εὐφῆμος, iv. 8
 εὐψυχεῖν, ii. 19
 ἐφιδεῖν, ii. 23
 ἐφ' ᾧ, iii. 12
 ἤδη πότε, iv. 10
 ἡμέρα Χριστοῦ, i. 6, ii. 16
 -ήμερος (compounds ending in), iii. 5

 Family, religion of the, p. 56
 Felix accuses Jewish priests, p. 4 sq.
 Festus and Agrippa, p. 7
 figura; see forma
 Flavia Domitilla; her history, p. 22,
 23; confusion respecting, p. 22
 Flavius Clemens; his history, p. 22;
 Baur on, p. 168, 169
 Fleury's Saint Paul et Sénèque, p. 276, 279, 327 sq.
 forma, figura, p. 125
 freedmen of Caesar, p. 170 sq.
 future after wa, ii. 11

 Gaius; see Caius
 Gallio, St Paul before, p. 299; Seneca's account of, ib.
 Gangites, p. 46, 47, 51
 Gaul, episcopacy in, p. 222
 genitive, i. 7, 19
 Georgius Syncellus on Philippians, p.
 140
 Gibbon; on the Neronian persecution,
 p. 23, 24; on the spread of Christianity, p. 322, 324
 Gischala, iii. 5

 gladiator; see amphitheatre
 Gnosticism; refuted by St Paul, p. 41; serves to develop episcopacy, p.
 199 sq.
 Graetz on Flavius Clemens, p. 168 gratia præveniens, cooperans, ii. 13 γνώσκειν, iii. 10
 γνήσιος, iv. 3; γνησίως, ii. 20 γνωρίζειν, i. 22
 γογγυσμός, ii. 14

 Hadrian, letter of; its authenticity, p.
 223 sq.
 Hananias, p. 229
 Hebrew; see Εβραῖος
 Hebrews, Epistle to the; its Alexandrian origin, p. 223; absence of sa-cerdotalism in and general argument of, p. 263 sq.
 Hegesippus; on St James, p. 206; on Symeon, p. 201 sq., 206; on the Corinthian Church, p. 214; on the Roman Church and bishops, p. 218, 220;
 his acquaintance with Eleutherus, p.
 221; aim of his work, p. 218, 238
 Hellenists, p. 185 sq.
 Heraclas of Alexandria, p. 229, 230 heretics, rebaptism of, p. 240 sq.
 Hermas; the name in St Paul, p. 174
 Hermas, the Shepherd of; its date, p.
 166 sq.; its author, p. 167, 220; his language, p. 221; on Church officers, etc., p. 217 sq.; on Clement, p. 167, 217, 219; possible acquaintance with Philippians, p. 74
 Hermes, p. 174
 Hero of Antioch, p. 208
 Herodion, p. 10, 17, 173
 Hierapolis; its bishops, p. 211 high-priests; mitre of, p. 252; Christians, so called, p. 250, 252, 255; see Christ
 Hilary; see Ambrosiaster
 Hippolytus; use of κληρος in, p. 246;
 sacerdotal terms in, p. 255
 Holzherr, p. 322
 Huber and Perizonius, p. 100 humility, a Christian virtue, ii. 4
 Hyginus, p. 220

- Jacob's blessing on Benjamin, iii. 5
 James (St); a bishop, p. 195, 206; but one of the presbytery, p. 195 sq.
 -ianus (the termination), p. 173
 Jehuda-ha-Nisi, p. 316
 Jerome (St); on the identity of bishops and presbyters, p. 96, 97; on the origin of episcopacy, p. 204, 227 sq.; on Church polity in Alexandria, p. 228 sq.; on episcopal ordination, p. 231; on Seneca, p. 268 sq., 291, 328 sq.; on St Paul's birth-place, iii. 5; quotes Theophilus, p. 75
 Jerusalem; bishops of, p. 195, 206 sq.; presbytery of, p. 195
 Jesus Justus, p. 12, 18, 31, 33
 Jewish Christians in Rome, p. 16 sq.
 Jewish priesthood; see priesthood
 Jews, in Rome, p. 14 sq., their Messianic hopes, p. 16; confused with Christians, p. 23, 24, 27; at Philippi, p. 51
 Ignatian letters (spurious), p. 232; on episcopacy, p. 210 sq., 234 sq.; on presbyters, p. 235; unchristian doctrine of, p. 235 sq.; not sacerdotal, p. 249; use of 'altar' in, p. 264; passage misinterpreted (Philad. 9), p. 249
 Ignatius (St); his bonds, p. 8; his journey to Rome, p. 34; sojourn at Philippi, p. 61, 62; Polycarp's reference to, p. 62, 64, 139; on the Roman Christians, p. 216; on episcopacy, p. 208, 232 sq.; recognises three orders, p. 96; not sacerdotal, p. 249; reminiscences of our epistle, p. 74 immortality of man, p. 320 sq.
 infinitive for imperative, iii. 16
 John Damascene, p. 251
 John (St); in Asia Minor, p. 200; matures episcopacy, p. 199, 205, 210
 Josephus; his mission to Rome, p. 4, 5; account of Agrippa's confinement, p. 101
 Jowett (Prof.) on lost epistles of St Paul, p. 137
 Irenæus; Pfaffian fragments of, p. 202; his honesty vindicated, p. 96; his use of terms 'presbyter' and 'bishop,' p. 95, 226 sq.; of 'oblations,' p. 261; of κληρος, p. 246 sq.; list of Roman bishops, p. 218 sq.; on Clemens Romanus, p. 166; on episcopacy, p. 225, 237 sq.; on priesthood, p. 251; on 2nd Apostolic Council, p. 201; his relation to Hegesippus, p. 218
 Ischyrras, p. 230
 Israelite, iii. 5
 Judaizers; not sacerdotal, p. 258; their activity in Rome, p. 17, 18, 68, i. 15 sq., iii. 2
 Julia, p. 175
 Julianus (of Apamea), p. 212
 Junia or Junias; see Andronicus
 Justin Martyr; use of μορφή, σχῆμα, p. 130; of 'oblations,' p. 261; not sacerdotal, p. 250
ἰδέα, εἶδος, p. 126
ἴνα, i. 9, ii. 2; (future with), ii. 11 ἴσα (ἴσος), ii. 6
ἰσόψυχος, ii. 20
 Lactantius on Seneca, p. 267, 292
 laity; see λαός, etc.
 Laodicea, St Paul's Epistle to, p. 137
 Latin Version, influence of the, p. 132 lapsed, controversy about the, p. 239 sq.
 law and the law; see νόμος Levites; ordination of, p. 180; duties of, p. 187 libations, Jewish and heathen, ii. 17 Linus, p. 218 sq.
 lots, use of, p. 246
 Lucan, p. 21
 Lucian, on the Christians, p. 27
 Luke (St); in Rome, p. 11, 35; at Philippi, p. 48, 51, 58 λαός, λαϊκός, λαϊκόν, p. 245 λατρεῖα, λατρεύειν, iii. 3 λειτουργία, ii. 17
λόγος (εἰς λόγον), iv. 15
λοιπὸν (τὸ λοιπὸν), iii. 1, iv. 8
 Macedonia; Roman provinces of, p. 49; collections of alms in, p. 58, 59; epistles written from, p. 59; epistles written to, i. 1, 28, p. 65; episcopacy

- in, p. 212 sq.; position of women in, p. 55
 Macro, p. 101 sq.
 Marcion; his parentage, p. 212; his copy of Romans, p. 175
 Marcus Aurelius; see Aurelius
 Mark (St), p. 12, 18, 223, 229
 Marsyas, p. 102
 Martinus Bragensis: his relation to Seneca, p. 329; works of, ib.; recensions, titles, and MSS of the Formula Honestæ Vitæ of, p. 330 sq.
 Mary, (a Roman Christian), p. 16, 171
 Matthias (St), appointment of, p. 246
 Melito, p. 75, 211
 Merivale (Dr); on the persecution of Nero, p. 23, 24; on prætorium, p. 98
 Messianic expectations in Rome, p. 16 metonymics, p. 55
 Milman (Dean), p. 248 ministry (the Christian); three orders of, p. 94, 184, 263 sq.; not sacerdotal, p. 182; St Paul on, p. 183; the temporary and the permanent, p. 183 sq.; views of the origin of, p. 184 sq.; how far a priesthood, p. 262 sq.; representative, not vicarial, p. 265 sq.; see sacerdotalism, priesthood, episcopate, etc.
 Mommsen on Cato, p. 309
 Montanism; a reaction, p. 237 mystery, the metaphor of, iv. 12
 -μα, -μός, (terminations), ii. 6 μεριμνᾶν, iv. 6
 μέσον (adverbial), ii. 15
 μετασχηματίζεσθαι (-μορφοῦσθαι), p. 128 sq.
 μή, μηδέν (ellipsis after), ii. 3 μίσθωμα, p. 9
 μόνον, i. 27
 μορφή (ὁμολωμα, σχῆμα), ii. 6 sq., p. 125 sq.; (εἶδος), p. 126 sq.
 μνείσθαι, iv. 12
 Name of God, ii. 9; of Jesus, ii. 10
 Narcissus (Nero's freedman); p. 21; his household, p. 173
 Narcissus (of Jerusalem), p. 206, 207
 Neander, criticism on, p. 248
 Neapolis, p. 47, 48, 49
 Neoplatonists, their use of μορφή, p. 127; conflict with Christianity, p. 317
 Nereus and his sister, p. 175
 Nero; administration of, p. 2, 3, 4; guilty acts of, p. 5; his persecution, p. 2; attempts to explain it away, p. 23 sq.; causes of it, p. 26; silence of heathen writers about it, p. 27, 28; account of it in the letters of Paul and Seneca, p. 328 sq.
 nominative (irregular), i. 30, iii. 19
 Novatian schism, p. 240
 νᾶλ, iv. 3
 νόμος and ὁ νόμος, iii. 5, 6, 9
 Oblation, offering; see Sacrifice
 Onesimus (Philemon's slave), p. 12, 30
 Onesimus (of Ephesus), p. 208, 210 ordination by presbyters, p. 229, 230 sq.; restricted to bishops, p. 230 sq.
 Oriental characteristics, p. 271
 Origen; on Clement of Rome, p. 166; on Gaius, p. 213; on the priesthood, p. 255 sq.
 οἶδα, i. 25
 δκνηρός, iii. 1
 δκταήμερος, iii. 5
 ὄνομα; τὸ ὄνομα, ii. 9; ἐν (τῷ) ὀνόματι, ii. 10 ὀπίσω, iii. 14
 ὁσμὴ εὐωδίας, iv. 18
 ὅστις, i. 28, ii. 20, iii. 7, iv. 3 οὐχ ὅτι, iii. 12, iv. 11, 17
 ὥς, pleonastic, ii. 12
 ὥς ἄν, temporal, ii. 23
 Palestine (bishops of), p. 207 sq.
 Palmas, p. 212
 pantheism admits no consciousness of sin, p. 294, 319 papacy, power of the, p. 242 sq.
 Papias, p. 211, 227
 parabolani, ii. 29
 paradox (verbal), iv. 7
 paranomasia, iii. 2
 Pastoral Epistles; Gnosticism attacked.

- in, p. 41; quotations in, p. 44; late date of, ib.; no sacerdotalism in, p. 243
- patriarchs (Jewish), p. 223; (Alexandrian), p. 224, 229, 230
- Patrobas, p. 174
- Paul (St); his birth-place, iii. 5; his tribe, ib.; his name Saul, ib.; a Hebrew and a Pharisee, ib.; his kinsmen, p. 16 sq., 171; not married, iv. 3; his persecution of the Church, iii. 6; his means of support, iv. 16; speech on Areopagus, p. 288, 302; his visit to Rome, p. 1 sq., 30; voyage thither, p. 34; length of stay, p. 3, 29; his first captivity, 7 sq.; his bonds, p. 8, 9; his abode in Rome, p. 9, 10, 100; his comparative liberty, p. 9; his associates and friends, p. 10 sq., 33 sq.; correspondence from Rome, p. 12, 39 sq.; preaching and success there, p. 13 sq.; interview with the Jews, p. 14 sq.; his feelings and sorrows at Rome, p. 38 sq.; hopes of release, p. 39 sq., ii. 24; trial, etc., p. 3, 4, 299; his silence about political events, p. 6 sq.; tradition of his death, ii. 8; chronology of his epistles, p. 137; lost letters of, p. 136 sq.; his irony, iii. 6; his acquaintance with Stoic diction, etc., p. 301 sq.; his use of hyperbole, p. 32; irregular constructions, i. 27, 29, 30, ii. 1, 5, 12, 22, iii. 18, iv. 10, 12; mode of closing his epistles, p. 124; see accumulated expressions, citizenship, Corinthians, Philippi, Philippians, Seneca, etc.
- peccatum, p. 294, 319
- Pelagius, on bishops and presbyters, p. 97
- Perizonius on 'prætorium,' p. 100
- Persis, p. 10
- Peshito Syriac, the; identifies the titles 'bishop' and 'presbyter,' p. 95
- Peter (St), in prison, p. 8; appoints bishops, p. 207, 208; styles himself 'fellow-presbyter,' p. 196
- Philemon, Epistle to, p. 12; not written from Cæsarea, p. 29, 30; date of, p. 30 sq.
- Philip (St) at Hierapolis, p. 200
- Philip of Gortyna, p. 215
- Philippi, former names of, p. 46; its site and natural advantages, p. 46, 47; its mines, p. 47, 48; site of the battle of, p. 47; mixed population of, p. 48; a Roman colony, p. 49, 50, i. 27; Jews at, p. 51 sq.; length of journey from Rome to, p. 37; St Paul's first visit to, p. 48 sq.; his conversions at, p. 52 sq.; their typical character, p. 53 sq.; women at, p. 54 sq., iv. 2, 3; his sufferings at, p. 57, 59, i. 30; grandeur of the incidents, p. 57; his second and third visits, p. 58, 59; later visits, p. 61; crime of Valens, p. 63; subsequent history of the Church of, p. 64; episcopacy at, p. 213
- Philippians, the; their communications with St Paul, p. 35 sq., 58; absence of Judaism among, p. 52, 67; their fidelity to St Paul, p. 52, 57; they send relief to him, p. 60, i. 5, 7, iv. 15 sq.; his affection for them, p. 65, 66, i. 1; their sufferings, p. 57, 58; their strife, p. 66, 67, i. 4, iii. 1, iv. 2 sq., 7; communications with Ignatius, p. 61, 62; correspondence with Polycarp, p. 62, 63; lost letters (?) of St Paul to them, iii. 1, p. 136 sq.
- Philippians, Epistle to the; written from Rome, p. 12, 29 sq.; date of, p. 30 sq., 61, 171; circumstances at the time, p. 32, 33; its motive, p. 65 sq.; structure and contents, p. 67 sq.; interruption of, p. 68, iii. 2, iv. 2; integrity of, p. 68, iii. 1; genuineness of, p. 73 sq.; allusion to Judaizers in, p. 17, 68, i. 15 sq., iii. 2 sq.; its characteristics, p. 41, 65 sq., 71 sq.; its cheerful tone, p. 65, i. 1, 4, 25, ii. 18, iii. 1, iv. 4, 6; compared with Acts, p. 37 sq.; with Col. Ephes. Philem., p. 37, 40 sq.; with Romans, p. 41 sq.; with Thessalonians, p. 65, 66, i. 1, 28, iv. 1, 15,

- 16; with Galatians, i. 1, 15; with 2 Corinthians, iii. 5; public reading of, p. 64; lessons to be derived from, p. 72
- Philippopolis confused with Philippi, p. 64
- Philistines in Rome, p. 171
- Philo, on the Word, ii. 9; his use of μορφή, p. 128
- Philologus, p. 175
- philosophy, later Greek, p. 269 sq.
- Phlegon, p. 98
- Piers Ploughman, p. 325
- Pinytus, p. 215
- Pistis Sophia, μορφή and σχῆμα in, p. 130 sq.
- Pius (I of Rome), p. 167, 220
- Plato (Platonists), ethics of, ii. 4; use of μορφή, εἶδος, etc. in, p. 126 sq.; his portrait of the just man, p. 291
- Plutarch; his silence about Christians, p. 28; his use of μορφή, p. 127
- Polycarp; a bishop, p. 208, 210; visits Rome, p. 220; martyrdom of, p. 316; analysis of his epistle, p. 62 sq.; its date, p. 62; passages in it explained, p. 62, 63, 138 sq., iv. 15; recognises three orders, p. 96; adopts St Paul's language, p. 74, i. 27, iv. 10; speaks of Epistle (or Epistles) to Philippians, p. 136, 138 sq.; mentions no bishop of Philippi, p. 213; has not sacerdotal views, p. 249 sq.
- Polycrates (of Ephesus), and his relations, p. 211; passages quoted from him, p. 210, 212; notice of St John in, p. 252; is he sacerdotal? p. 252
- Pompeius, p. 14
- Pomponia Græcina, probably a Christian, p. 21
- Poppæa; her character, p. 5; relations with the Jews, p. 5, 6, 328; supposed antagonism to St Paul, p. 38, 40, 328; reported a Christian, p. 21
- Posidonius the Stoic, p. 308
- Pothinus, p. 222
- Prædicatio Pauli, p. 200
- prætor, another name for duumvir, p. 50
- Prætorian camp, p. 9, 99 sq.
- Prætorian guards, p. 7, 9, 19, 98 sq.; prefect of the, p. 7, 8, 299
- prætorium; see πραιτώριον
- presbyter (elder), among the Jews, p. 94, 190; ἐπίσκοπος a synonyme of, p. 93 sq., 191 sq.; Christian presbyters derived from the synagogue, p. 190 sq.; in the mother Church, p. 191; in Gentile Churches, p. 191 sq.; their duties, p. 192 sq.; their names, p. 192; bishops so called, p. 226 sq.; how addressed by bishops, p. 94 sq., 228; 'presbyteri doctores,' p. 193; see ministry, priest, etc.
- present tense, force of, ii. 17
- priest distinguished from presbyter, p. 184; the two confused in many languages, p. 184, 244
- priesthood; idea common to Jewish and heathen, p. 180, 263; the Christian, p. 181, 182 sq., 262 sq.; universal, ii. 17, p. 266; the Jewish, p. 180; not called κλήρος, p. 245; analogy with Christian ministry, 261 sq.; see ministry, sacerdotalism, etc.
- Primus of Corinth, p. 214
- Priscilla; see Aquila
- proseucha, p. 51
- provocatio, p. 7
- Publius of Athens, p. 215
- Puteoli, p. 25, 32
- pythoness at Philippi, p. 53
- πάλιν* (its position), i. 26
- παλλατιανός*, p. 98
- παραβουλεύεσθαι* (-βουλεύεσθαι), ii. 30
- παράκλησις*, ii. 1
- παραμένειν* (μένειν), i. 25
- παραμύθιον*, ii. 1
- παρησία*, i. 20
- πᾶς*; οἱ πάντες, ii. 21; τὰ πάντα, iii. 8; ἐν παντί, ἐν πᾶσι, iv. 12
- πεινᾶν*, iv. 2
- πειποθέναι* with dative, i. 14
- περισσοτέρως*, i. 14
- πίστις* (ἡ) personified, i. 27
- πλεονεξία*, p. 63
- πληροῦσθαι* with accus., i. 11
- πλήν*, iii. 16; πλήν ἔτι, i. 18
- πνεῦμα* (ψυχή), i. 27

πολιτευεσθαι, i. 27
 πολιτευμα, iii. 20
 πραιτώριον, p. 9, 29, 38, 97 sq., i. 12
 πρεσβύτερος; see presbyter προκοπή, i. 12
 προσευχή (δέησις), iv. 6 προσφιλής, iv. 8
 πρόφασις, i. 18
 πρύτανις, p. 195
 πρωτοκαθεδρίτης, p. 217 πρῶτος (without article), i. 5 πτύρεσθαι, i. 28
 φαίνειν, φανερθεσθαι, ii. 15
 φθάνειν εἰς, iii. 16
 Φιλιππησίοι (and other forms), iv. 15
 φόβος καὶ τρόμος, ii. 12 φρονεῖν τὸ ἐν, τὸ αὐτό, ii. 2 φωστήρ, ii. 15
 ψυχή, i. 27, ii. 2

Quadratus, p. 215

Quinisexstine Council, p. 186, 187
 quinquennalis, p. 50

Rebaptism of heretics, p. 240 resurrection, power of the, iii. 10, p. 320, 322

Revelation; see Apocalypse righteousness by faith and by law, i. 11, iii. 9

Ritschl's theories, p. 186

Roman Empire; its relations to Christianity, p. 1, 24; cosmopolitan idea realised in, p. 304

Romans, Epistle to the; salutations in, p. 16, 17, 20, 171 sq.; conciliatory tone of, p. 17; integrity of, p. 175; its resemblance to Philippians, p. 41 sq.

Rome, Jews in, p. 14, 171; Greeks and Orientals in, p. 171 sq., 176

Rome, the Church of, p. 13 sq.; its composition and character, p. 13; Jewish Christians in, p. 16 sq.; Gentile Christians in, p. 18; earliest converts foreigners, p. 171; at first Greek, not Latin, p. 19, 20, 221; transition to a Latin Church, p. 221; social rank of, p. 20 sq.; rapid growth of, p. 25, 31 sq.; deacons limited to seven, p. 186 sq.; episcopacy and Church government in, p. 215 sq.; succession and chronology of bishops, p. 167, 218 sq.; communications with Cyprian, p. 239 sq.; see Clemens Romanus, Nero, Paul (St), etc.

Rothe, on the angels of the Apocalypse, p. 197; on the origin of episcopacy, p. 199 sq.

Rufus, p. 10, 174

Sacerdotalism; the term defined, p. 243; its absence in the N. T., p. 179, 181, 243 sq., 262 sq.; rapid growth, p. 244; progress of development, p. 252 sq.; how far innocent, p. 256; whether due to Jewish or Gentile influences, p. 257 sq.; see priesthood sacrifice (offering); use of the term in the N. T., p. 259 sq.

Sagaris, p. 211

'saints,' i. 1

Samaritans in Rome, p. 171

Saul and Paul, iii. 5

Schwegler, criticisms on, p. 15, 168

Seneca; possibly of Shemitic race, p. 275; his personal appearance, p. 282; relations with Nero, p. 3, 310; his retirement, p. 5; chronology of his writings, p. 289, 296; spurious work ascribed to, p. 329 sq.; Haase's Edition of, p. 327, 329; his character, p. 309 sq.; his own confessions of weakness, p. 310 sq.; on the Jews, p. 14; silence about the Christians, p. 27, 28; on the population of Rome, p. 171; accounted a Christian, p. 268; supposed connexion with St Paul, p. 268, 298 sq.; literature on the subject, p. 276; compared and contrasted with St Paul, p. 275 sq.; coincidence of thought and language with the Bible, p. 276 sq.; nature of God, p. 276 sq.; relation of man to God, p. 277 sq.; guardian angels, p. 277; an indwelling spirit, p. 278; universality of sin, p. 278 sq.; the conscience, p. 279; self-examination,

- etc., p. 279 sq.; duties towards others, p. 280 sq.; parallels to the Sermon on the Mount and to the Gospels, p. 281 sq.; to the Apostolic Epistles, p. 285; to St Paul, p. 285 sq., ii. 17; fallacious inferences therefrom, p. 289; his obligations to earlier writers, p. 290 sq.; portrait of the wise man, p. 289 sq., 291; a true Stoic in his theology and his ethics, p. 292 sq.; his possible knowledge of Christianity, p. 298 sq.; his cosmopolitanism, p. 304 sq.; his vague ideas of immortality, p. 321 sq.; his sense of the need of a historic basis, p. 324; see Stoicism
- Seneca and Paul, the letters of; described, p. 269, 327, 328 sq.; MSS and editions of, p. 327; motive of the forgery, p. 327; opinion of St Jerome about them, p. 269, 328, 329; mentioned by St Augustine and later writers, p. 328; their spuriousness, p. 269, 328; a theory respecting them discussed, p. 329 sq.; de Copia Verborum mentioned in them, p. 329 sq.
- Serapion, p. 209, 211
- Seven, appointment of the, p. 185 sq.; they were deacons, p. 186
- Silas, p. 48
- simplicity, stress-laid on, ii. 15
- sin; see peccatum
- slaves; their position raised by Christianity, p. 56; transfer of, p. 173
- Socrates, on αὐτάρκεια, iv. 11; on preparation for death, p. 323
- Soter, p. 221
- Stachys, p. 10, 172
- stadium, metaphor of the, i. 27, ii. 16, iii. 14, iv. 1
- state after death, i. 23
- Stephen of Rome, p. 204
- Stœcheus, p. 102
- Stoicism; rise of, p. 269 sq.; Oriental origin and character of, p. 271 sq., 273 sq., 297 sq., 308, 317, 320; exclusive attention to ethics, p. 272 sq.; neglect of physics and logic, p. 272 sq.; its prophetic character, p. 273 sq.; its westward progress, p. 274; the older Stoics, p. 307 sq.; Stoicism at Tarsus, p. 301 sq.; in Rome, p. 275, 308; native places of its great teachers, p. 297, 301 sq.; its obligations to Judaism, p. 297 sq.; a preparation for the Gospel, p. 300 sq.; wide influence of its vocabulary, p. 301; contrast to Christianity, p. 291 sq., 306; its materialistic pantheism, p. 292, 317 sq.; consistent blasphemies, p. 293, 314; no consciousness of sin, p. 294, 318 sq.; 'sacer spiritus,' p. 278, 294; faulty ethics of, p. 294 sq., 319 sq.; apathy of, p. 295, 320; defiance of nature in, p. 319; inconsistencies of, p. 296, 319; paradoxes and paralogsms of, p. 323; its cosmopolitanism, iii. 20, p. 303 sq.; contempt of the body, iii. 20; αὐτάρκεια, iv. 11; the wise man, p. 302 sq.; diverse and vague ideas about man's immortality, p. 320 sq.; no idea of retribution, p. 323 sq.; want of a historic basis, p. 324 sq.; religious directors, p. 308; improved theology in Epictetus, p. 314; improved ethics in M. Aurelius, p. 315; modifications and decline of, p. 317; hymnology of, p. 318; exclusiveness of, p. 320; meagre results of, p. 306 sq., 317; causes of failure, p. 317 sq.; see Epictetus, M. Aurelius, Seneca, Zeno, etc.
- subdeacons, p. 187
- Suetonius, on the Jews in Rome, p. 16; on Clemens and Domitilla, p. 22
- Symbolum, pass of, p. 47
- Symeon (Bp. of Jerusalem), p. 201, 206
- synagogues; character and number of, p. 190; adopted by the Christians, p. 205; angels of, p. 197; rulers of, p. 190; Chazan of, p. 187 sq.
- synods (episcopal), p. 212, 222, 240
- Syntychē, iv. 2, p. 168
- Syrian Church, p. 209; sacerdotalism in, p. 259; see Ancient Syriac Documents
- Syrians in Rome, p. 171
- σάρξ, p. 285

- σκοπεῖν, ii. 4 ; σκοπεῖτε, iii. 17
 σκύβαλα, etc., iii. 8
 σπένδομαι, ii. 17
 σπλάγχνα (σπλαγχνίζεσθαι), i. 8, ii. 1 στέφανος (διαδήμα), iv. 1 στίκειν, i. 27, iv. 1 στρατήγιον, p. 99
 στρατοπεδάρχης, p. 7, 99
 συγχαίρειν, ii. 17
 συμμόρφος (-φοῦσθαι, -φίξεσθαι), p. 127 sq.
 συναθλεῖν, i. 27
 συναιχμάλωτος, p. 11
 συνείδησις, p. 301
 σύνζυγος, iv. 3 συνμιμηταί, iii. 17
 συνσχηματίζεσθαι, p. 128 sq.
 Συντύχη, iv. 2
 σχῆμα (μορφή, ὁμολογία), ii. 6 sq., p. 125 sq.

 Tacitus on the Christians, p. 23
 Tarsus, Stoicism at, p. 301 sq.
 Telesphorus, p. 220
 tent, metaphor from a, i. 23
 Tertullian ; on the Philippian letter, p. 64, 76 ; on episcopacy, p. 210, 213, 225, 238 ; on the Church and bishops of Rome, p. 221 sq. ; on Seneca, p. 268 ; on natural Christianity, p. 325 ; use of 'clerus' in, p. 247 ; sacerdotal views of, p. 253 sq.
 Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs ; no sacerdotalism in, p. 257 sq. ; resemblances to Philippians in, p. 74 thanksgiving, duty of, iv. 6
 Thebuthis, p. 206
 Theodore of Mopsuestia ; a passage corrected and explained, p. 95 ; on bishops and presbyters, p. 97 ; on bishops and Apostles, p. 193 ; on prætorium, p. 97
 Theodoret, on bishops and presbyters, p. 97 ; on bishops and Apostles, p. 193 sq. ; on prætorium, p. 98
 Theophilus of Antioch, p. 209
 Theophilus of Cæsarea, p. 207 Thessalonians, Epistles to the ; see Philippians, Epistles to the Thessalonica, mistake respecting, p. 49 ; lost letters to, p. 137 ; episcopacy at, p. 213
 Thomas, Acts of ; reference to Philippians, p. 75
 Thrace, episcopacy in, p. 215
 Thræseas of Eumenia, p. 212 thundering legion, p. 28
 Thyatira, Lydia of, p. 53
 Tiberius ; his treatment of Agrippa, p. 101 sq. ; of Drusus, p. 101 ; prætorian camp built by, p. 99
 Tigellinus, p. 5, 40
 Timotheus ; his character, ii. 20 sq. ; in Rome, p. 11 ; at Philippi, p. 48, 58, 61, i. 1, ii. 19 sq. ; his position at Ephesus, p. 197
 Titus ; his position in Crete, p. 197 transcribers, fidelity of, ii. 1 travelling, rate of ancient, p. 37
 Tryphena, p. 173 sq.
 Tryphosa, ib.
 Tübingen school, p. 73, 168 sq.
 Tychicus, p. 11, 30, 31
 Tyndale and other versions, rendering of πρεσβύτερος in, p. 244 τὰ κατ' ἐμέ, i. 12
 ταπεινόφρων, etc., ii. 4 τέλειοι, iii. 15
 τί γάρ ; i. 18
 τὸ αὐτό, ii. 18
 τοῦτο ἦνα, i. 9
 Θεός, ὁ Θεός, ii. 6
 θεοσεβής, p. 5
 θεοφόρος, p. 313
 θλίψις, i. 17
 θυσία, ii. 17
 θυσιαστήριον ; see altar

 Valens (the Philippian) ; his crime, p. 63, 213 ; the name common in Macedonia, p. 63
 Victor of Rome, p. 221 sq.
 vine, parable of the, p. 324 sq.
 Vitringa, criticisms on, p. 186, 197, 205
 Volkmar, criticisms on, p. 168
 Urbanus, p. 10, 172
 Vulgate rendering of πρεσβύτερος, p. 244 ὁμᾶς repeated, i. 7

ὑμῶν etc. (for εαυτοῖς etc.), ii. 5

ὑπακοή, ii. 12

ὑπάρχειν, ii. 6, iii. 20

ὑπερυψοῦν, ii. 9

Wiclif's version, p. 244

Wieseler on prætorium, p. 101

woman; raised by Christianity, p. 54, 55; her influence in Macedonia, p. 55

Word of God, the; see Christ

work, the, ii. 30

Xystus, p. 219, 220; proverbs ascribed to, p. 220

ξενία, p. 9

Zeno; his system compared with that of Epicurus, p. 270 sq.; a Phœnician,
p. 271; his character, p. 307; his admired polity, p. 304, 309; see Stoicism

Zephyrinus, p. 221 sq.

Zoticus, p. 212

ζῆλος, iii. 6

100

MARCH 1914

CATHOLIC THEOLOGICAL UNION
BS2705.L71913 CD01
SAINT PAUL'S EPISTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS

3 0311 00024 6129

WITHDRAWN

4939

BS 2705.3 .L53 1873

Lightfoot, Joseph Barber,
1828-1889.

St. Paul's Epistle to the Philippians

BS 2705.3 .L53 1873

Lightfoot, Joseph Barber,
1828-1889.

St. Paul's Epistle to the Philippians

83⁵⁰

54

